Manager Reeves questioned them about their interest in the Union, reprimanded those who had joined, and warned others that joining would do them no good (X 3860; I 306–308, III 1035–1036, 1044–1046, 1052–1055, 1067–1068, 1073–1074, 1076, 1079–1087, IV 1141, 1153–1154, 1329). Mrs. Gray, manager of the Company's retail outlet store (X 3860; IX 3336, X 3572, 3644–3645), told an employee that it was a "shame" that she had joined the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3860; III 1088–1089). Production Engineer Dewey Atchison asked employees why they did not come to the Company instead of "going down to a bunch of foreigners" (X 3860; III 1068, IV 1331), advised against getting "messed up" with the Union (X 3860; III 1100–1101), and warned that they would be fired if they did (X 3860; III 1101–1102). The instructors, who at that time unquestionably had power to direct, discipline, and recommend the discharge of employees (X 3850; III 1059, 1061, 1091–1096, IV 1120i–1120k, 1120aa, 1120ee, 1120*ll*–1120mm, VII 2416), also warned employees that those who joined the I. L. G. W. U. would be discharged and urged employees not to give their money "to those foreigners" (X 3860; III 1047–1048, 1063, 1069, 1090, IV 1150–1151, 1323, 1325–1326, 1329, 1331). One instructor referred to the I. L. G. W. U. members as "scum" (X 3860; III 1070, IV 1331).

A substantial number of the employees who joined the I. L. G. W. U. were laid off or discharged shortly after joining. In June 1934, about a dozen employees attended a dinner for the purpose of discussing joining a labor organization at the home of Mrs. Yarnell, an employee who had joined the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3860–3861; III 1036–1037, 1046–1051, 1098 IV 1153). Mrs. Yarnell was discharged in July 1934, although she had worked for the Company since December 1924 (X 3861; III 1046–1049). Within a few months thereafter, all except one of the girls who had attended the dinner were either laid off or discharged (X 3861; III 1037–1040; 1042–1044, 1051). As a result of these lay-offs or discharges, the I. L. G. W. U. filed a charge against the Company under Section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, alleging that eight employees had been laid off because they joined the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3861; IV 1316–1317). A hearing on these charges was held in the spring of 1935 but, before a decision issued, the National Industrial Recovery Act was declared unconstitutional by this Court (X 3861; III 1032–1110a, IV 1318).

In the latter part of 1934 and the first part of 1935, all the remaining employees who were known to have joined the I. L. G. W. U. were transferred from the Company's main plant to a temporary branch, and laid off when the branch closed down in June 1935, despite the fact that most of these girls had several years service with the Company, whereas employees in the main plant with less service were retained (X 3861; III 1062–1066, 1073–1077, IV 1120nu–1120vv, 1126v–1129, 1130d–1130e, 1132, 1135–1136, 1156b–1157, 1324–1325, 1327, 1333–1334).

The Board expressly refused to make any finding as to whether the discharges and lay-offs were discriminatory (X 3860, n. 25); however, it did find, on the testimony of some of the employees, that as a result of the sequence of events above related, employees became afraid to join, admit their membership in, or discuss the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3861; III 1044–1046, 1047–1048, 1076, 1080–1081, 1084, 1141–1142).[9]

2. Formation of the Loyalty League.—In February 1935, Mrs. Gray, manager of the Company's retail store (X 3861; IX 3336, X 3572, 3644–3645), and Mrs. Strickland, head of the pattern department (X 3861; IX 3233, X 3650), formed an organization among the Company's employees known as the "Nelly Don Loyalty League" (X 3861; III 798d–798e, 1078, IX 3336, 3439). The initial step in its organization was a meeting at the home of Mrs. Gray, attended by approximately 50 employees, representing the various divisions of the factory (X 3861; III 732–733, 798e, IX 3030, 3032). Within the next three days, membership cards were circulated and signed by substantially all of the Company's employees

[9] As shown, infra, pp. 90–92, all evidence offered by the parties at the first hearing respecting these lay-offs and discharges, was received by the trial examiner; however, he refused to receive further evidence on this matter at the hearing on remand.

(X 3861–3862; III 798e). Mrs. Strickland, in circulating the cards, stated that Mrs. Reed "would close her doors before she would have a union shop, and we should sign these cards to keep our jobs and keep us in work because she would close the doors" (X 3862; III 1078). The statement of association circulated with the membership cards (X 3862; I 181, 304–305, V 1620, IX 3032), stated that:

> We protest against and will resist all attempts of outside interference with the business of said company or with our relations to the company as employees.
>
> We recognize the fact that * * * * we have had generous and fair treatment from Nelly Don (Mrs. Reed), President of the company, and we repose our confidence in her rather than in professional agitators who are sent here to create discontent among the employees of the company.

Mrs. Strickland refused to allow Virginia Stroup, who was president of the I. L. G. W. U. local, to sign a membership card because she belonged to another organization (X 3862; III 1078–1079). Similarly Instructor Allison refused to give Frances Reidel a card on the ground that she was an I. L. G. W. U. member (X 3862; III 1071).

Following the signing of the cards, on February 8, 1935, a mass meeting of all the employees was held during working hours on the second floor of the building occupied by the Company's plant (X 3862; I 308, VIII 2666, IX 3033, 3066–3067, 3439). Mrs. Gray presided and explained the meaning of the word "loyalty" (X 3862; III 733, 798e, VIII 2667, IX 3032, 3439).

All of the Company's supervisory employees, including Sales Manager Keyes, Employment Manager Hyde, Production Manager Reeves, and Production Engineer Atchison, became members of the League (X 3859, 3860, 3863; II 407, 429, 431, III 1091, 1097, 1108, IV 1113, 1117). Meetings of the League were regularly held on the second floor of the building (X 3862; I 39–40, 309, VIII 2666, IX 3033, 3067). These were announced by notice to the instructors, transmitted either by Mrs. Wherry, factory manager (III 1011, 1095–1096, 1108, IX 3344, 3435), or by the Company's switchboard operator, calling each section; the instructors in turn notified the girls in their sections to attend the meeting (X 3862; I 308–309, IX 3328, 3337, 3398, 3457).

Each section of the plant had a representative, elected during working hours by the employees in the section, to represent them in the League (X 3862–3863; I 39, II 378j–378k, III 798e, VIII 2888–2889, IX 3032–3033, 3148). The League had songs of loyalty and sponsored the wearing of pins bearing the initial "L" as a demonstration of loyalty to Mrs. Reed (X 3863; I 319–320, II 542, VIII 2581, 2608–2609, 2667, 2694, 2843, X 3572).

C. THE COMPANY'S CONTINUED OPPOSITION TO THE I. L. G. W. U.; UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES PRECEDING FORMATION OF THE D. G. W. U.

1. Events culminating in the "Loyalty Pledge" of March 2, 1937.—Following the lay-offs and discharges of non-I. L. G. W. U. members in late 1934 and early 1935, the organization of the Loyalty League in 1935, and the inability of the I. L. G. W. U. to carry to a successful conclusion its case under the National Industrial Recovery Act due to the decision declaring that Act unconstitutional, labor relations at the Company's plant remained in a static condition until March 1937 (X 3864). The Loyalty League continued in existence; new employees were invited to join; and solicitations took place on Company time and property (X 3864; VIII 2607–2608, X 3572). In some instances, instructors brought new employees notices that they were eligible to membership, directed them to the desk of Rose Todd, the Loyalty League president, and later brought them their Loyalty League pins (X 3864; VIII 2607–2608, X 3572). Although, as the Board was careful to point out, the formation of the Loyalty League preceded the passage of the Act by about five months and was, therefore, not a violation of the Act (X 3863–3864), its continuance subsequent to the enactment of the Act, the continued participation of its supervisory employees in its affairs, including the leadership of Todd as its president, and the Company's grant to the League of its time and facilities, were undoubtedly violations of the Act. Since, as the Board found, the Company used the League and its officers "for the purpose of impeding and preventing the organization of its employees by the I. L. G. W.-U.", it interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act (X 3871, 3889).

On March 2, 1937, within a few days after the I. L. G. W. U. had announced in the newspapers a second campaign to organize the Donnelly employees (X 3864–3865; III 1019), Mary Sprofera and Inez Warren, shipping clerks, went during working hours to most of the Company's factory workers and secured their signatures to a pledge which read as follows (X 3865; V 1623–1647):

> We, the undersigned, as members of the Donnelly Garment Co. wish to make it known we are positively happy and contented with the positions which we hold with this organization and refuse to acknowledge any union labor organization. We are thankful for the real humanitarian interest extended by our employer, Mrs. Reed.

The pledge was passed through the sewing sections, being handed from girl to girl while they were at work at their machines (X 3865; I 311–312, II 594, 602, VIII 2578, 2609–2615, 2637–2638, 2725). The instructors and thread girls knew that the pledge was being passed, but, with seven exceptions,[10] they themselves did not sign when the pledge went through their respective sections (X 3865; I 311–312, IX 3334–3335, 3438–3439). Three employees, Sylvia Hull, Mamie Carlson, and Elsie Greenhaw, refused to sign, one stating that she disagreed with the expression of opposition to labor organizations, another that she was not satisfied with conditions (X 3865; I 354–354a, 354p–354q, II 377–378, V 1354–1355). Two of these girls later signed for fear of losing their jobs but their names were erased (X 3865; V 1354–1356, VII 2432–2433, Tr. 1832). At least one other employee whose name was not erased signed for fear of being fired (X 3665).

On the afternoon of the same day, employees Sprofera and Warren presented the signed pledge to Mrs. Reed at her home (X 3865; II 513–514, IV 1300, VII 2074–2077, 2431–2437). Thereafter, as a result of arrangements made between Mrs. Reed and newspaper representatives, a picture of the girls presenting the pledge was taken and appeared on the front page of a local newspaper, accompanied by the statement that Mrs. Reed was going to place the pledge in the cornerstone of a new building she was planning to erect (X 3865; II 513–514, VII 2074–2077, 2434–2436).

[10] Instructors Carrie Abrams (III 1004, V 1631, VIII 2893–2894, 2950), Ada Wolfe (II 721, III 1005, V 1623, VIII 2611–2612), Clara Finnell (III 1004, V 1627, VIII 2951), and Helen Little (II 424b, III 1007, V 1631, X 3675), and thread girls Nellie Biggs (III 1003, V 1629, VIII 2949, X 3551), Grace Davis (III 1004, V 1627), and Emma Grober (III 1004, V 1631, VIII 2951), signed the pledge when it went through their respective sections (X 3865).

Mrs. Reed shortly thereafter expressed to her office manager and head of the accounting department, Mrs. Keyes, a wish that all the employees, not merely factory workers, should sign the pledge (X 3866; X 3640–3641, 3657–3658). Mrs. Keyes thereupon had one of the girls in her department, Pauline Shartzer, circulate the pledge among all the employees who had theretofore not signed (X 3866; I 354–354a, IV 1299–1300, X 3641–3644). As a result, everyone in the plant, including the full supervisory force, watchmen, porters, maids, stenographers, indeed, every employee except the three heretofore mentioned, signed the pledge (X 3866; I 354a, IV 1288–1291, V 1643–1649, VII 2432–2433, VIII 2947–2955, IX 3335, X 3642–3644).

The Company thus used its influence flowing from its economic power over the employees to preclude the choice of a bargaining representative by them. Such solicitation of employee expressions of opposition to unionization during working hours, with the knowledge and approval of the employer, has uniformly been held violative of the Act. National Labor Relations Board v. Remington Rand, Inc., 94 F. 2d 862, 870 (C. C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 304 U. S. 576; Titan Metal Mfg. Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 106

F. 2d 254, 260 (C. C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 308 U. S. 615; National Labor Relations Board v. New Era Die Co., 118 F. 2d 500, 503 (C. C. A. 3); Virginia Ferry Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 101 F. 2d, 103, 104 (C. C. A. 4); National Labor Relations Board v. West Kentucky Coal Co., 116 F. 2d 816, 817 (C. C. A. 6); National Labor Relations Board v. Colten, 105 F. 2d 179, 181–182 (C. C. A. 6); Wilson & Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 103 F. 2d 248, 251 (C. C. A. 8); Swift & Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 F. 2d 87, 94 (C. C. A. 10).

2. The March 18, 1937, meeting.—Following the publication in a local newspaper of an announcement that the I. L. G. W. U. had officially launched a campaign to organize the Company's employees (X 3866; III 1021), that organization, on March 9, 1937, sent the Company a letter requesting a bargaining conference (X 3866–3867; III 1022–1024). The Company did not reply to this letter, but its president, Mrs. Reed, had the letter read to a mass meeting of all the employees on March 18 (X 3867–3868; I 48–49, 147–148, 310, 354b–354c, II 588, VIII 2620).

This meeting was sponsored by the Loyalty League and its officials and was called to discuss means of combatting the I. L. G. W. U.'s projected organizational campaign (X 3867, note 35); like the previous meetings of employees, it was held during working hours on the second floor of the building housing the Company's plant (X 3867; I 308–309, IX 3328–3330, 3438, 3457–3458, X 3575, 3666). The employees were notified orally by their instructors that they were to attend the meeting, the instructors in turn having been notified either by Factory Manager Wherry or over the plant telephones (X 3867; I 308–309, 354b, II 595, IX 3328, 3438, 3457, X 3539–3540, 3575, 3666). The meeting was attended by most of the Company's supervisory force (X 3867; I 309–310, II 534, IX 3438).

Rose Todd, who was at that time president of the Loyalty League as well as closely associated with the management (see discussion of Todd, supra, pp. 28–32), presided at the meeting (X 3867–3868; I 44d). Chairs for the meeting were rented from a local business concern in the name of the Loyalty League (X 3867; I 334w, 345, III 960, 962, V 1621).

Following a few opening remarks by Todd, Mrs. Reed was invited to come in and address the employees (X 3868; I 48). Mrs. Reed brought the letter from the I. L. G. W. U. with her and, as we have said, had someone read it to the assembly (X 3868; I 48–49, 147–148, 310, 354b–354c, II 588, VIII 2620). She then made a speech in which she inaccurately described the Company's past labor policy, asserting that the employees had never been asked whether or not they belonged to any union (see account of the Company's questioning of employees in 1934, supra, pp. 34–35); promised to protect her employees from violence at the hands of the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3868; III 1029–1030); and stated that neither Dubinsky, president of the I. L. G. W. U., nor any other "but-tinsky" could intimidate her or the Company into forcing the employees to join the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3868; III 1030).[108] She also told the employees "I have had lots of nice things happen to me in my lifetime, but I have never had anything that made me so proud and so happy as the list of names that came to my house"—referring to the "Loyalty" pledge in which her employees had unanimously agreed to refuse to accept any labor organization (X 3868–3869; III 1029). The Board found that Mrs. Reed's remarks made it plain to the employees that the Company's attitude toward unionization had not changed and that membership of any of the employees in the I. L. G. W. U. was not to be tolerated (X 3869; I 310, 354c, III 1029, V 1362a, IX 3332, 3413, 3438, 3459, X 3666).

The Board appraised the speech in the setting in which it occurred. The calling by Todd of the meeting avowedly to discuss means of preventing organization of the plant by the I. L. G. W. U. and her assumption of the chairmanship of the meeting, in view of her supervisory status, her confidential status, and her presidency of the anti-union Loyalty League, were themselves improper. The use of the interdepartmental phones, the relaying by instructors to employees of the direction to attend such a meeting, and the holding of the meeting during working hours, were likewise violative of the Act. In this setting, and in the light of the Company's anti-union background, the Board's finding that Mrs. Reed's speech interfered with and coerced employees in the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act, is plainly warranted. The speech, in this setting, was not protected by the First Amendment. See National Labor Relations Board v. Virginia Electric and Power Co., 314 U. S. 469, 477; Virginia Electric and Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 319 U. S. 533, 538–539, affirming 132 F. 2d 390 (C. C. A. 4); Thomas v. Collins, 323 U. S. 516, 537; National Labor Relations Board v. American Laundry Machinery Co., 152 F. 2d 400, 401 (C. C. A. 2); National Labor Relations Board v. M. E. Blatt Co., 143 F. 2d 268, 273–275 (C. C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 323 U. S. 774; National Labor Relations Board v. Trojan Powder Co., 135 F. 2d 337, 339 (C. C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 320 U. S. 768; Elastic Stop Nut Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 142 F. 2d 371, 378 (C. C. A. 8), certiorari denied, 323 U. S. 722; Reliance Mfg. Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 143 F. 2d 761, 763 (C. C. A. 7); National Labor Relations Board v. William Davies Co., 135 F. 2d 179, 181 (C. C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 320 U. S. 770; R. R. Donnelley & Sons Co. v. National Labor Relations Board (C. C. A. 7).

[108] Numerous witnesses testified that Mrs. Reed referred to "Mr. Dubinsky or any other ski" (I. 310, 354c, V. 1362a, IX 3332, 3413, 3438, 3459, X 3576, 3666). The Board did not resolve this conflict in testimony (X 3868).

3. The April 23, 1937, demonstration against I. L. G. W. U. members.—On April 22, 1937, a local newspaper carried an announcement by the I. L. G. W. U. that Sylvia Hull, one of the Company's operators, had been named as a delegate to the bi-annual convention of the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3869; III 1015). On the next morning, from the time Hull arrived at work until she was removed from her machine by Mrs. Hyde, employment manager, she was subjected to a continuous anti-union demonstration (X 3869–3870; II 535, 541–542d, IV 1339–1340, V 1341–1350, IX 3013–3015, 3479–3480, X 3517). Although Hull sat at her machine sewing and did nothing to provoke any hostility, girls from all over the plant came in groups to her place of work on the eighth floor of the plant (X 3870; IV 1340, V 1341–1343, 1349–1350, VIII 2693, 2926–2927, 2991–2993, IX 3013–3015, 3480). They told Hull that she could not belong to the I. L. G. W. U. and demanded that she surrender her Loyalty League pin (X 3870; IV 1346–1347, 1349, IX 3014, 3036, 3042–3043). Some of the girls stood on nearby tables (X 3870; V 1346–1347); they sang songs and booed (X 3870; V 1346, VIII 2665, 2693, IX 3479–3480). Although Mrs. Allison, the instructor of the section in which Hull worked, was present throughout the demonstration, she did not order the girls back to work or take any kind of action (X 3870; II 663–664, V 1343–1344, 1347, 1350, X 3573). Mrs. Bogart, head of the dividing department, was also present and pointed Hull out to some of the demonstrators (X 3870; V 1349–1350, IX 3437, 3445–3446). After the demonstration had continued for an hour or so, Employment Manager Hyde appeared and, after watching the demonstration for a short time, ordered the girls to return to work; when they refused to do so, she removed Hull from the floor and sent her home (X 3870; II 535–536, V 1356–1357, X 3517, 3573).

On the same day, Fern Sigler came to work, displaying for the first time her I. L. G. W. U. membership pin, and also wearing a Loyalty League pin (X 3870; I 319). She was subjected to a demonstration similar in character to that to which Hull was subjected (X 3870; I 70–72, 315–316, 319, 321–325, X 3666–3667). Sigler attempted, throughout the demonstrations, to continue sewing, and even when Production Manager Baty, accompanied by Rose Todd, ordered Sigler to his office, she expressed the desire to remain at her work (X 3870–3871; II 442, 444–445, 497–499, 544). Baty, however, commanded her to go to his office and she complied (X 3871; II 444).

The interview in Baty's office was participated in by Mrs. Hyde, Mr. Baty and Miss Todd (X 3871; III 801–807). When Baty insisted on sending Sigler home, she argued with him that she had a right to join the I. L. G. W. U., and that it was the employer's duty to control its employees. Baty replied, "We don't go into the Wagner Act. We are just running our business here and not a law office." Rose Todd then purported to explain the Company's labor relations policies and told Sigler, among other things, "We are going to run an open shop as long as the majority feels that way" (X 3871; III 801–807).

As a result, Sigler was sent home at once, while no steps were taken to discipline any of the demonstrators (X 3871; II 445, 499, 542–542b, III 807). Neither Hull nor Sigler thereafter returned to work at the plant (X 3890; II 499, 536, 543, 549). While the Company claims to have made attempts to recall Hull, it never actually reached her, nor did the Company take any steps which would guarantee either of the girls safe, unmolested work (X 3871, 3890; II 536, 543, 548–549, V 1356–1357).

Upon these facts, the Board concluded that the Company "approved of and encouraged the demonstrations and took advantage of them to reveal once more to the employees its hostility to the I. L. G. W. U. and its support of anti-I. L. G. W. U. activities," thereby violating Section 8 (1) of the Act (X 3871). The Board also found that Hull did not voluntarily leave her employment, but that the Company temporarily laid her off because of her membership in and activities on behalf of the I. L. G. W. U., thereby discriminating in regard to her tenure of employment in violation of Section 8 (3) of the Act (X 3890).[11]

These findings are clearly proper irrespective of whether the demonstrations arose from the Company's prior anti-union activities or from an independent antipathy of the employees to the I. L. G. W. U. One major purpose of the Act is to prevent abuse of the economic power which an employer wields over its employees so as to interfere with and restrain them in the selection of a bargaining agent.[12] Such abuse may plainly result from omission as well as commission on the part of the employer.[13] The Board, as well as the Company's employees, could not but recognize that, in the normal course of operations, an employer is [11] The complaint did not allege that Sigler's employment was discriminatorily terminated and the Board made no finding in that regard (X 3871, n. 38).

[12] See Section 1 of the Act. See also, S. Rep. No. 573, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 3, 10; H. Rep. No. 1147, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 16, 17–18.

[13] Compare National Labor Relations Board v. Hudson Motor Car Co., 128 F. 2d 528, 531, 532–533 (C. C. A. 6); Kansas City Power and Light Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 111 F. 2d 340, 346–347 (C. C. A. 8); Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 112 F. 2d 657, 660–661 (C. C. A. 2), affirmed per curiam, 312 U. S. 660; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 113 F. 2d 992, 996 (C. C. A. 2); Swift & Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 F. 2d 87, 93 (C. C. A. 10). In each of these cases the court found the source of employer responsibility for unfair labor practices in the fact that it failed to take affirmative action.

prompt to halt, by invocation of its power to discipline, any substantial disturbances which may interrupt its operations. The Company's failure to follow this normal procedure in this case was a patent abuse of its authority over its employees and manifested its approval of such conduct. Cf. National Labor Relations Board v. Elkland Leather Co., 114 F. 2d 221, 223 (C. C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 311 U. S. 705. And in considering the effect of such manifest approval upon the employees, the Board could not ignore the part which the Company had already played in fostering hostility to the I. L. G. W. U. An employer may not escape responsibility for the anti-union acts of its employees where "the attitude of the [employer's] non-union men was, if not inspired by, at least encouraged and promoted by the [employer] and its agents." Clover Fork Coal Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 97 F. 2d 331, 335 (C. C. A. 6); National Labor Relations Board v. New Era Die Co., Inc., 118 F. 2d 500, 504 (C. C. A. 3); National Labor Relations Board v. Weirton Steel Co., 135 F. 2d 494, 495 (C. C. A. 3); National Labor Relations Board v. Taylor-Colquitt Co., 140 F. 2d 92, 93 (C. C. A. 4); National Labor Relations Board v. Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., 129 F. 2d 661, 664 (C. C. A. 5); National Labor Relations Board v. J. Greenebaum Tanning Co., 110 F. 2d 984, 987 (C. C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 311 U. S. 662; National Labor Relations Board v. General Motors Corp., 116 F. 2d 306, 309–310

(C. C. A. 7); National Labor Relations Board v. J. G. Boswell Co., 136 F. 2d 585, 591 (C. C. A. 9).

D. FORMATION OF THE D. G. W. U.; COMPANY PARTICIPATION AND SUPPORT

1. Formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. by Company representatives.— Shortly after the March 18 meeting at which Mrs. Reed addressed the employees, two representatives of management, Todd and Atherton, both of whom were officers of the Loyalty League, and another employee, Ormsby, hired an attorney, Tyler, to advise the employees in opposing the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3872; I 38–39, 176, II 555–556, 558–559, Tr. 318). When Tyler asked for a retainer fee, Todd borrowed $1,000 from a local bank upon the unsecured note of the Loyalty League (X 3872; II 556–557; III 959), deposited the money in the Loyalty League checking account, and a League check, signed by Todd as president, and Hartman as treasurer, was given to Tyler (X 3872; I 179, II 378i, 378l–378q, III 949). Upon the attorney's advice that the best way to combat the I. L. G. W. U. was to form a plant union—advice which was given only after this Court held the Wagner Act constitutional on April 12, 1937—Todd called a meeting of the employees on April 27 for that purpose. This meeting was held during working hours. (X 3872; I 328c–328d, II 558–559, IV 1365–1366, IX 3312–3314, 3430, 3457–3458, 3470–3471, X 3530, 3541, 3620, 3667).

Like Loyalty League meetings, it was held on the second floor of the building occupied by the Company's plant (X 3862, 3872; I 39–40, 309, VIII 2666, IX 3033, 3067).

The organizational meeting of the plant union was planned and organized by, and was under the complete control of the Company's representatives (X 3875). Employees, while at work, were notified by their instructors to attend—the instructors having in turn been notified by the Company's telephone operator or by Mrs. Wherry, factory manager (III 1011, 1095–1096, 1108, IX 3344, 3435)—and the meeting was attended by supervisory employees, accompanied by the non-supervisory employees under them (X 3872; I 328c–328d, 354c–354d, II 378ee, 704g, V 1364e, 1374d, VIII 2692, 2911–2913, 2995, IX 3276, 3309–3312, 3315–3316, 3397–3399, 3430–3434, 3467, 3470, X 3551, 3619–3621, 3667). Chairs for the meeting were rented in the name of, and paid for by, the Loyalty League (X 3872; I 345, 349, III 963, V 1621).

Todd presided at the meeting (X 3872; I 328g, III 821). Her opening remarks indicated that she regarded the meeting as par of the series which has preceded it, for she stated that she hoped "this meeting is going to be as enthusiastic as the last one was" (the March 18 meeting), and explained that she had called the meeting "as chairman of the Committee of Employees" (X 3872–3873, III 821). She stated that she had consulted two lawyers whom she had known for years and that they advised forming a plant union (X 3873; III 822). Todd indicated that she knew the question was in everyone's mind as to why the Loyalty League would not suffice, but that it would not (X 3873; III 822), that a union would have to be formed if they were successfully to resist attempts of organization by an outside union (X 3873; III 822–823). She then told employees that the new organization would be called the "Donnelly Garment Workers' Union," that although she was as distressed as they were at having to use the word "union", it seemed to be necessary (X 3873; III 822).

After listening to Todd's speech and a talk by Attorney Tyler, who had been invited to address the meeting, the employees, without any discussion, voted unanimously to form the D. G. W. U. (X 3873–3874; III 822–826). Before the meeting adjourned, about 1,300 charter membership cards previously prepared were distributed, signed, and collected; by-laws previously prepared, were adopted without alteration; and a general chairman, Todd, and eight group chairmen were nominated by a committee appointed by Todd and were unanimously elected to serve as officers and representatives (X 3874–3875; I 80b–80c, 176–177, 328h–330, III 826–830, X 3553, 3667). The purpose of the organization as stated in its by-laws was, inter alia, "the protection of employees and members of this Union from coercion, intimidation, violence or threats of violence, in order to force them to join unions organized and dominated by outsiders not employees in this plant" (X 3874; III 798f).

Through the membership and activities of supervisory employees, the Company continued its control and direction of the D. G. W. U. (X 3878). In addition to Todd, the general chairman, other supervisory employees including instructors and thread girls, Heath Cowan, head of the receiving department, Marvin Price, adviser on mechanical matters and in charge of maintenance of factory building and equipment, and Ortense Root, head of the sample department, all of whom the Board found to be representatives of management (see supra, pp. 23–33), regularly attended, notified employees under them to attend, and took an active part in subsequent meetings of the D. G. W. U. (X 3875–3877; I 99, 131, 136, II 421, 424–424b, 428–429, 510, III 743–763, 830, 854, 865–866, 868–870, 875–882, 887, 891–894, 897–900, 909–911, 1003–1005, 1007, 1011, V 1349–1350, VII 2175, 2255–2257, VIII 2671–2672, 2676–2677, 2680, 2689, 2733, 2911–2912, 2914, 2949–2953, 2961–2962, IX 3157, 3316, 3426–3427, 3435–3436, 3445–3446, 3450, X 3644, 3649–3650, 3671, 3673, 3675).[14] Thus, at

[14] In addition, Dewey Atchison, production engineer (X 3876; II 715–716, 718d–718e, III 1032, 1091), Ted Scoles, head of the cutting department (X 3877; I 136, II 424), Lena Tyhurst, head of the inspection department and in charge of the quality of work (X 3877; II 424a, 428–429, III 1007, VII 2175, VIII 2961–2962, IX 3157, 3435, X 3673), and Mrs. Bogart, head of the dividing department the 1938 election of officers, five thread girls nominated or seconded the nomination of two nominating committees and both committees were unanimously elected (X 3876; III 875–876, 1003–1004, VIII 2680, 2689, 2733, 2911–2912, 2949). The two committees brought in identical recommendations for the primary offices of chairman, secretary, treasurer and also for the representative of the mechanics (X 3877; III 879). Moreover, upon the election of the nominees, which was by standing vote, Todd called upon two instructors to give their opinions as to which slate received the larger vote (X 3877; III 881–882, 1003–1005, VIII 2953). Todd was the candidate for chairman on both slates (X 3877; III 879). The election in 1939 repeated in many respects the occurrences of the previous year; however, this time Todd herself appointed the two nominating committees without going through the device of nomination and unanimous selection as in the 1938 election (X 3877; III 897–898, 899–900). These two nominating committees each brought in slates naming Todd as chairman and the same employees as treasurer, secretary, and representative of the mechanics (X 3877; III 909–910). Again the election was by an open standing vote (X 3877; III 911).

(X 3877; II 424a, III 1003, V 1349–1350, VII 2255–2257, IX 3445–3446), although not shown to have been active, were members of the D. G. W. U. (X 3877; III 743, 753, 755).

Although upon several occasions employees questioned the right of some of these representatives of management to be members of or to attend and participate in meetings of the D. G. W. U., and expressed the view that the presence of such persons at meetings precluded the employees from speaking freely of their complaints, Todd assured them that all employees except the executives of the Company and the head of the personnel department were properly eligible for membership and might participate in the activities of the D. G. W. U. (X 3877–3878; III 926–927, IX 3320–3324, 3411–3413, X 3554).

2. The D. G. W. U. procedure for setting piece-work rates.—Soon after the D. G. W. U. was organized, the group chairmen, who composed its executive committee, appointed a committee to represent the D. G. W. U. in adjusting piece-work rates with the Company (X 3881; III 923). Some 600 to 800 of the Company's 1,300 employees were paid on a piece-work basis so that the procedure by which piece-work rates were fixed was concededly "the most important thing the individual operators have to bargain for with the Company" (X 3881; I 114, II 490, VII 2173, 2186). When a new style of garment was designed, a separate piece-work rate was set for each separate operation to be performed on the garment, i. e., so many cents being paid for each dozen shoulder seams stitched, so many cents for each dozen pockets set in, etc. (V 1374f–1375).

The piece-work committee appointed consisted of Mrs. Lulu Nichols, Josephine Spalito, and Rose Todd (X 3881; III 923). Mrs. Nichols, a supervisory employee, and Miss Spalito, her assistant, were both employed by the Company for the purpose of establishing for the Company the piece-work prices to be paid its employees (X 3881; II 417–418, 718f, III 1007, 1109, V 1374–1375, VII 2144–2148, 2158, 2234–2239, 2400). Mrs. Nichols was described by Employment Manager Hyde as an "executive" of the Company (X 3881; III 1109), and she admittedly had final authority in setting piece-work rates on behalf of the Company (X 3881; I 114, VII 2114, 2158, 2234–2239, 2400). Thus, the same persons who set the rates on behalf of the Company in the first instance, were also representatives of the D. G. W. U. for the purpose of protesting and negotiating with regard to those rates (X 3881).

3. The closed-shop, check-off and wage agreements.—On May 6, 1937, Todd and the D. G. W. U. group chairmen informed Mrs. Reed that they would want a contract concerning hours, wages, and working conditions "which up to now have been satisfactory," and that they would like a closed shop (X 3878; III 913). Mrs. Reed replied, "I understand that is very essential to industrial peace" (X 3878; III 913). The D. G. W. U. then expressed a desire to pay part of the salary of Rose Todd, a substantial amount of whose working time, it was contemplated, would be spent on D. G. W. U. business, and Mrs. Reed, acquiescing, told Todd, "I do not feel at the present time that you need to give all of your time to the union" (X 3878; III 913). In fact, as we have shown, (supra, p. 31), the Company continued to pay all of Todd's regular salary and the amount paid her by the D. G. W. U. was in addition.

Thereafter, in a single day, May 27, 1937, a contract providing for a closed shop was presented by the D. G. W. U. to the Company, was modified at the suggestion of the Company to include, inter alia, a provision that no employee should serve on the bargaining committee of the D. G. W. U. unless he had been in the employ of the Company for at least a year, and was agreed upon and signed by the parties (X 3879; I 84–86, 89–90, 198, III 807–811, 918–922, VII 2095–2098, 2104–2105, 2376, 2378–2379). In June, after the I. L. G. W. U. had publicly announced its intention to obtain a minimum weekly wage of $16.00, Todd recommended to the group chairmen, and they decided, that in order to improve upon the I. L. G. W. U.'s accomplishment, the D. G. W. U. should demand a minimum of $16.50 for piecework operators (X 3880; I 118, III 929). The Company granted this demand and entered into a supplemental wage agreement with the D. G. W. U. on June 22 (X 3879–3880; II 462, III 812–821, VII 2110–2112, 2379–2386). In August or September 1937, the Company granted the

D. G. W. U.'s request for a check-off of monthly dues of 25 cents and each employee thereafter signed a card prepared by the Company authorizing such check-off (X 3880; I 224, 226–227, 233–234, 259, 262, 274a–274b, III 799, VII 2112–2113, 2387–2388). The D. G. W. U. issued no receipts, kept no record of individual dues payments and had no means of knowing what individuals paid dues in the past months (X 3880; I 266–271, 292a, II 704g–704i). Nor were the general chairman and the treasurer of the D. G. W. U. able to state at the hearing what proportion of each month an employee must work to entitle the D. G. W. U. to collect his dues from the Company (X 3880; I 271, II 704i). The original closed-shop agreement, the supplemental wage agreement, and the check-off agreement continued in effect without change up to the date of the hearing before the Board (X 3880; I 126–127, 271, 277–278, III 947–948, VII 2112, A 389).

4. Further financial and other support by the Company.—The Company, in various other ways, lent financial and other support to the D. G. W. U. It permitted not only the organizational meeting, but the succeeding three or four other membership meetings to be held during working hours (X 3882; IX 3314–3315, 3410–3411, 3414 3434, 3449, 3450, 3458, X 3669–3670). Thereafter, although regular monthly meetings of the general membership were held after working hours and on the employees' own time, they continued to be held on the second and later on the first floor of the building in which the plant is located. (X 3882; I 129–130, IX 3228). Prior to May 10, 1937, the D. G. W. U. obtained the permission of the landlord to use the second floor as a meeting place and pay no rent therefor (X 3882; I 129–130).[15] After May 10, 1937, the D. G. W. U. continued to meet on the second floor until the Company remodeled a portion of the first floor to serve as an auditorium which then became the meeting place (X 3882; I 130–131, II 380–381, III 877, 939, 943). Although the D. G. W. U. met on the second floor monthly from May 1937 on, it was not until November 1937 that the question of paying rent was raised. (X 3882; II 378cc–378dd, III 939, 943). The first rental payment was made in April 1938 and consisted of $3.00 per meeting held during the past year (X 3882; II 378cc–378dd). It is plain that [15] Although the first and second floors were not leased by the Company prior to May 1937 (I 129–130, II 380–381), employees had regularly attended Loyalty League meetings and Company style shows held on these floors and did not know whether or not they were leased by the Company (VII 2354–2358, VIII 2666, 2897, IX 3033, 3067, 3229). This free use of the property can only be explained by the assumption that the landlord regarded the activities of the D. G. W. U. as a part of the Company's business activities—a gratuity which the tenant would expect to be accorded as a corollary to its lease. The grant by the landlord to the D. G. W. U. would clearly never have been given if it had not been sought by the Company's supervisors, as it was (I 129–130), and desired by the Company.

prior to November 1937, rent-free use of the Company's premises was contemplated: Todd, the general chairman, twice announced at meetings that use of the Company's facilities was entirely proper (X 3882; III 835, 853).

Meetings of the group chairmen who composed the executive committee of the D. G. W. U., prior to May 1938, were held in the office of Mrs. Spilsbury, head of the designing department (X 3882–3883; I 131, 136, III 928), and thereafter in the auditorium on the first floor (X 3883; III 946). No rental was ever paid for such use of this property (X 3883; II 378cc–378dd, III 877–912, Tr. 4989–5030, 5000, 5024).

Both the general meetings of the D. G. W. U. and the meetings of the group chairmen were called through use of the Company's facilities, either by use of its interdepartmental telephone system, or by sending a so-called I. D. M. (interdepartmental memorandum) to each department of the plant through the Company's regular messenger service (X 3883; I 128a–129, II 378ee, 704g, V 1364e, 1374d, VIII 2897, IX 3152–3153, 3276, 3397–3399, 3434, X 3558). Announcement of a meeting over the Company's plant telephone system was accomplished by Todd's notifying the telephone operator to call each department. Each section had a telephone and it was the duty of the instructor or thread girl to answer the telephone and convey any message that might be given either to the employees generally, if it was a general meeting, or to the specific employee in question if it was a group chairmen meeting (X 3883; V 1374d, VIII 2968, IX 3434, 3452, 3467–3468, 3474, X 3558). The interdepartmental telephones were not available for use by the employees generally, but could only be used for calls by supervisory employees pertaining to Company business (X 3883; IX 3342, X 3672). In addition, Todd called meetings of employees generally or of the group chairmen, by preparing a notice on the Company's I. D. M. paper which was sent to each section of the plant via the Company's messenger service (X 3883; I 128a–129, VIII 2897, IX 3152–3153, 3480, X 3558, 3671). Upon the arrival of an I. D. M. in any section, it was the duty of the instructor or thread girl to read the I. D. M. and pass it to the girls in the section (X 3883; I 128a–129, IX 3152–3153, 3342, X 3487, 3558, 3671, 3672, 3759).

Todd also utilized the I. D. M. system for collecting assessments and sending instructions pertaining to D. G. W. U. business to members (X 3883; III 869, 900, 936). The D. G. W. U. received its mail at the plant through Company messengers and frequently used the plant bulletin boards (X 3884; I 128–129, 264–265, VIII 2580).

Piece-work operators who served as group chairmen or officers were paid by the Company for time lost from work while attending to

D. G. W. U. business (X 3884; IX 3427–3429, 3447–3449, 3466–3467, X 3603–3604, 3606–3609 3618). Time workers were allowed to take time from their work with no deductions in pay (X 3884; I 127–128, 166, Tr. 6942).

At a meeting on May 11, 1937, Todd announced that "our work will be conducted" at a desk on the ninth floor of the plant and that she could be reached on Union business at "any time necessary" (X 3884; III 830, 833, 835). Todd's desk was the D. G. W. U.'s only offices; its records were kept there in a file belonging to the Company (X 3884; I 35–36) and Union business was regularly transacted by employees who went there for that purpose (X 3884–3885; I 133, III 831, 869–870). Thus, the check-off cards heretofore referred to, which were printed and distributed by the Company, were signed and turned in at this desk over a two-week period by employees who came there from all over the plant (X 3885; I 262–263). Membership cards of those who were absent from the April 27 meeting were signed and left at this desk (X 3885; Tr. 451). When Todd left on her vacation in December 1937, she informed the group chairmen that a substitute would be at her desk from 11:00 a. m. to 12:45 each day—much longer than the usual half-hour lunch period—to transact D. G. W. U. business (X 3885; III 941, IX 3393).

Grievances were reported to Todd during the working day and she attended to them on Company time (X 3885; Tr. 611–612). She also collected money for the D. G. W. U. on Company time and directed the D. G. W. U. representatives to do the same (X 3885; III 869).

Membership cards were mimeographed after working hours on a machine owned by the Company (X 3885; I 59–60, 62–62a, 262). Copies of by-laws were produced on a ditto machine belonging to the Company (X 3885; I 62). The D. G. W. U. owns no typewriter and the secretary of the D. G. W. U. has often used a typewriter owned by the Company for typing the minutes of the meetings of the D. G. W. U. and of the group chairmen (X 3885; I 107–108).

5. The Board's conclusions regarding the D. G. W. U.—Either the Board's findings regarding Todd's supervisory or confidential status (supra, pp. 28–32), or its findings respecting the instructors' or thread girls' status as foremen and assistant foremen (supra, pp. 23–28), in and of themselves would necessitate the finding that the Company dominated the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. Todd's role in the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. (supra, pp. 53–58, 59–66), was such that, assuming her supervisory or confidential status, there can be no doubt of the correctness of the Board's finding that through her the Company dominated the formation of the D. G. W. U. and thereafter retained Company control of that organization (X 3886). Similarly, the membership and activities in the D. G. W. U. of the instructors and thread girls (supra, pp. 53–58) were such that, assuming their status as foremen and assistant foremen, there can be no doubt of the correctness of the Board's finding that their "presence inevitably prevents the organization from being free of the [Company] domination" (X 3886). Their role in the nomination and election of the executive committee in 1938 (supra, p. 57), itself spelled domination.

Quite apart from the role of Todd and the instructors and thread girls in the D. G. W. U., the composition of its committee for the adjustment of piece-work rates itself constituted fundamental and unmistakeable domination of the D. G. W. U., as the Board found (X 3887). As shown (supra, pp. 58–59), this committee, the most important of all the D. G. W. U. committees, was composed entirely of management representatives, two of whom had as their sole duty the job of establishing piece-work rates on behalf of the Company. The result was, as the Board noted (X 3887), that the Company "sits on both sides of the bargaining table and the aggrieved operators are left without any independent collective bargaining with regard to piece-work rates, ordinarily a matter jealously guarded for the promotion of the employees."[16]

The House Committee Report on the bill which became the Act, in explaining the purpose of Section 8 (2) of the Act, stated that "collective bargaining is reduced to a sham when the employer sits on both sides of the table" (H. Rep. No. 1147, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 18). It is, of course, immaterial, when the employee organization is dominated by the employer, as here, that the employees may feel that they are acting freely in having a representative of management serve as their bargaining agent. The Act does not permit such a course of conduct. National Labor Relations [16] For descriptions of the manner in which bona fide unions bargain respecting piece rates, see The Twentieth Century Fund, Trends in Collective Bargaining (1945), pp. 74–75; Sumner H. Slichter, Union Policies and Industrial Management (1941), pp. 341–344; C. Lawrence Christenson, Collective Bargaining in Chicago: 1929–1930 (1933), pp. 341–345; Morris Greenberg, How to Operate Under a Collective Agreement, Society for the Advancement of Management Journal, Vol. III, No. 1 (January, 1938), p. 8; National Industrial Conference Board, Studies in Personnel Policy No. 19, Some Problems in Wage Incentive Administration (1940), pp. 15–16; John R. Commons, Trade Unionism and Labor Problems (2nd series, 1921), pp. 215–217; Wilfred Carsel, A History of the Chicago Ladies' Garment Workers' Union (1940), p. 247; International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, Report of the General Executive Board to the Twenty-fifth Convention, 1944, pp. 50–53; Spencer Miller, Jr., Labor's Attitude Toward Time and Motion Study, Mechanical Engineering, Vol. 60, No. 4 (April 1938), p. 289, 290–291; Harold B. Bergen, Problems of Scientific Management in Unionized Plants, Mechanical Engineering, Vol. 60, No. 3 (March 1938), p. 235, 237–238.

Board v. Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, 303 U. S. 261, 267–268; National Labor Relations Board v. H. E. Fletcher Co., 108 F. 2d 459, 465–466 (C. C. A. 1), certiorari denied, 309 U. S. 678; National Labor Relations Board v. Griswold Mfg. Co., 106 F. 2d 713, 721 (C. C. A. 3); Virginia Ferry Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 101 F. 2d 103, 105 (C. C. A. 4); American Enka Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 119 F. 2d 60, 62–63 (C. C. A. 4); National Labor Relations Board v. Rath Packing Company, 115 F. 2d 217 (C. C. A. 8).

Moreover, all the circumstances accompanying the organization and functioning of the D. G. W. U. compel the conclusion that it is a Company-dominated organization. Prior to the enactment of the Act and thereafter until the Act was held constitutional, the Company had made it clear to its employees that it was opposed to the I. L. G. W. U., and that membership therein was an act of serious disloyalty to Mrs. Reed (supra, pp. 33–53). When the Act was declared constitutional, Todd and Atherton, officers of the anti-I. L. G. W. U. Loyalty League and the whole supervisory staff found that a union was necessary, though distasteful (supra, pp. 53–55). At the same meeting at which the subject of organizing a union was first presented to the employees, the D. G. W. U. was organized, officers elected, by-laws adopted and approximately 1,300 employees enrolled as members (supra, pp. 55–56).

The use of the Loyalty League bank account in borrowing money, hiring an attorney, and renting chairs serve to make abundantly clear the similarity of the role played by the D. G. W. U. to that played by the Loyalty League; the conformity to the accustomed procedures of the Loyalty League as to the method of calling a meeting, place of meeting, and time (supra, pp. 37–40, 44–45, 53–54, 61–65), point unmistakably in the same direction and were useful means of taking advantage of the employees' accustomed subservience to the employer's desire to place the employees in a strait-jacket with respect to labor matters. No employee confronted with the situation presented at the April 27 meeting could have felt free to refuse to join the D. G. W. U. The hasty grant of the closed-shop and check-off (supra, pp. 59–61), prevented the escape of any employees thereafter from the pattern of anti-I. L. G. W. U. employment relations dictated by the Company. Cf. Virginia Electric and Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 319 U. S. 533.

In addition, the grant of extensive use of the Company's facilities, of pay for time spent during working hours on D. G. W. U. business, as well as the membership of the instructors, thread girls and other representatives of management in the D. G. W. U. (supra, pp. 53–54, 56–57, 59, 61–66), constituted such substantial support by the Company of the D. G. W. U. as to compel the Board's conclusion that such labor organization existed in contravention of Section 8 (2) of the Act."

The grant by the Company of a closed-shop contract to the D. G. W. U. under the circumstances was, as the Board found (X 388), a violation of Section 8 (3) of the Act, for it constituted discrimination in regard to a condition of employment to encourage membership in a labor organization as proscribed by that Section. All employees of the Company, as a condition of their employment, were compelled to join the D. G. W. U. The Company in thus forcing D. G. W. U. membership upon its employees was not protected by the proviso to Section 8 (3) of the Act which protects closed shop contracts with legitimate labor organizations which have been selected by a majority of the employees in an appropriate bargaining unit, for the proviso exempts from its protection any labor organization "established, maintained, or assisted" in violation of Section 8 (2) of the Act.

E. THE BOARD'S ORDER IS VALID AND PROPER

The Board's order required the Company to cease and desist from dominating, interfering with, or contributing support to the D. G. W. U. or any other labor organization; from giving effect to any contract with the D. G. W. U.; from discouraging membership in the I. L. G. W. U. or any other labor organization; from using the Loyalty League to interfere with, restrain, and coerce its employees; and from in any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees (X 3896-3897). As affirmative action which would remedy the Company's unfair labor practices, the Board ordered the Company to withdraw recognition from and completely disestablish the D. G. W. U.; to reimburse its former and present employees for all dues and assessments which it has deducted from their wages on behalf of the D. G. W. U.; and to post appropriate notices (X 3897).

[11] Under the compelling facts of this case, the testimony of employees that they joined and formed the D. G. W. U. of their own free will was properly accorded no weight by the Board (See discussion infra, pp. 73-82).

These are the usual and uniformly approved remedies for unfair labor practices such as those found by the Board in this case. Aside from their challenge to the Board's findings of unfair labor practices, neither the Company nor the D. G. W. U. in their briefs in the court below challenged any portion of the order except that requiring reimbursement of checked-off dues and assessments. The validity of such an order requiring reimbursement of dues checked off under a closed-shop agreement with a company-dominated union has heretofore been approved by this Court in Virginia Electric & Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 319 U. S. 533, 539–545, and is no longer open to question.

II

THE COURT BELOW ERRED IN HOLDING THAT THE COMPANY AND THE D. G. W. U. WERE DEPRIVED OF DUE PROCESS BY THE BOARD'S TREATMENT OF CONCLUSIONARY TESTIMONY RECEIVED PURSUANT TO THE COURT'S REMAND ORDER

As stated supra, p. 9, the court below, in its first decision, held that the Board had denied the Company and the D. G. W. U. due process by excluding the testimony of employees, in accordance with offers of proof, that they formed and joined the D. G. W. U. of their own free will and did not know of any interference with, domination or support of the D. G. W. U. by the Company. The offers of proof were very comprehensive, including not only conclusionary testimony to that effect but also cumulative testimony as to how and why employees had formed or joined the D. G. W. U. (III 743–763, 765–795). At the hearing on remand the Board received, as we have shown, the testimony which the court held had been wrongfully excluded (supra, p. 10).

The court below in its second decision, from which this appeal is taken, held that although the Board had received the evidence referred to in its first decision as having been wrongfully excluded, the conclusionary testimony of employees that they formed and joined the D. G. W. U. of their own free will and were not influenced, interfered with or coerced by the Company "received no different or greater consideration upon the second hearing than it did upon the first, and that it was disregarded in both hearings" (XIII 44).

The court accordingly concluded that the Board had again denied due process to the Company and the D. G. W. U. (XIII 52).

A. THE PROPRIETY OF THE BOARD'S TREATMENT OF THE CONCLUSIONARY TESTIMONY

It is submitted that the Board's treatment of the evidence under consideration was entirely proper. As mentioned, supra, pp. 11–12, the Board stated in its decision that it had "carefully considered all such evidence" but found that it did "not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the [Company] committed acts of interference and assistance in the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. which subjected that organization to the [Company's] domination and which removed from the employees selection of the D. G. W. U. the complete freedom of choice which the Act contemplates" (A 619). It found, under the circumstances of this case, that such testimony was "totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily designated the D. G. W. U." and expressed the view, moreover, that it was "impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from [its] experience in administration of the Act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case" (A 619).

We submit that the Board's treatment of the testimony in question was entirely proper for several reasons. Under the circumstances of this case, the organization, structure, and Company support of the D. G. W. U. were such as to ensure Company domination. As shown supra, pp. 33–71, the Company, after demonstrating strong opposition to the organization of its employees by the I. L. G. W. U., formed an organization called the Loyalty League whose primary purpose was the frustration of efforts of the I. L. G. W. U. to organize its employees, and thereafter, through the Loyalty League and its supervisory employees, set up and took a leading part in the administration of a labor organization called the D. G. W. U., participated in determining the structure of the bargaining committee, controlled the piece-work committee through membership of its supervisory employees on that committee, granted the D. G. W. U. a closed-shop contract, agreed to a checkoff of dues for that labor organization, and otherwise contributed financial and other support to it. The evidence of Company domination and support was thus so strong and conclusive that the Board was compelled to find a violation of Section 8 (2) of the Act. No introspective testimony of an employee that he in fact was not coerced could overcome the necessary conclusion to be drawn from the Company's overt acts. Under similar facts, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in Bethlehem Steel Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 120 F. 2d 641, 653, held that employee testimony, excluded by the trial examiner, as to whether the employees were conscious of being influenced, restrained, interfered with, coerced or dominated by their employer "would have been irrelevant."

Moreover, even assuming arguendo, that the facts described supra, pp. 33–71, would not "ensure Company dominance and violate the Act" (Bethlehem Steel Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, supra, 120 F. 2d at 653)—that a different inference might be possible—the conclusionary testimony of the employees that they joined the D. G. W. U. of their own free will and were not influenced, interfered with, or coerced by the Company is so introspective and unreliable in character that the Board should not be required to accord it greater weight than the more demonstrable contrary evidence, or, indeed, to receive such evidence at all. Thus the Board was correct both in holding that the conclusionary testimony was outweighed, and that, while it had been considered, it was immaterial (A. 619.). This is so partly because employees who have been subjected to their employer's illegal interference cannot separate in their own minds those beliefs which have been instilled by their employer's unfair conduct from those which they formed or might have formed independently of such conduct. Hence, an employee may believe that he has not been coerced, and so testify, when in fact he has been coerced. The domination, interference, and restraint of the employer having economic power over him through a long period of years, as here, necessarily colors the employee's point of view. And even if the employee realizes that he has been influenced or coerced by his employer's coercive conduct, he may not feel free so to express himself while testifying in the presence of his employer or its representatives (compare II 613, 718b–718c, VII 2065–2066, VIII 2621).[18]

This Court, in National Labor Relations Board v. Link-Belt Co., 311 U. S. 584, 588, recognized the futility of any attempt by the Board to "probe the precise factors of motivation which underlay each employee's choice" of a bargaining representative, and pointed out that "normally the conclusion that their choice was restrained by the employer's interference must of necessity be based on the existence of conditions or circumstances which the employer created or for which he was fairly responsible and as a result of which it may reasonably be inferred that the employees did not have that complete and unfettered freedom of choice which the Act contemplates." This necessity of weighing the employer's conduct in each case, and determining from the nature of the conduct, rather than from the minds of the employees, whether the conduct has been in contravention of the Act, has been recognized by the courts in many situations. Indeed, it has become almost axiomatic that where employer conduct is of a kind which tends to interfere with or coerce employees in their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act, the Board does not need to prove that such conduct actually had the effect of interfering with or coercing the employees involved.[19]

[18] It is well recognized that employer-conducted polls as to the preference of employees for a bargaining representative cannot be considered indicative of the free and uncoerced choice of the employees. International Association of Machinists v. National Labor Relations Board, 311 U. S. 72, 76, affirming 110 F. 2d 29, 36 (App. D. C.); National Labor Relations Board v. New Era Die Co., 118 F. 2d 500, 503–504 (C. C. A. 3); Titan Metal Mfg. Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 F. 2d 254, 260 (C. C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 308 U. S. 615; National Labor Relations Board v. Rock Hill Printing & Finishing Co., 131 F. 2d 171, 172–173 (C. C. A. 4); Shell Oil Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 128 F. 2d 206–207 (C. C. A. 5); National Labor Relations Board v. Colten, 105 F. 2d 179, 181–182 (C. C. A. 6).

[19] See National Labor Relations Board v. John Englehorn & Sons, 134 F. 2d 553, 557 (C. C. A. 3); National Labor Relations Board v. A. S. Abell Co., 97 F. 2d 951, 955–956 (C. C. A. 4); Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 113 F. 2d 85, 92 (C. C. A. 5); National Labor Relations Board v. American Mfg. Co., 132 F. 2d 740, 742 (C. C. A. 5); National Labor Relations Board v. Aintree Corp., 132 F. 2d 469, 472 (C. C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 318 U. S. 774; National Labor Relations Board v. Illinois Tool Works, 153 F. 2d 811, 814 (C. C. A. 7); Elastic Stop Nut Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 142 F. 2d 371 (C. C. A. 8), certiorari denied, 323 U. S. 722; National Labor Relations Board v. Crown Can Co., 138 F. 2d 263 (C. C. A. 8), certiorari denied, 321 U. S. 769.

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, in Western Cartridge Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 134 F. 2d 240, 244–245, certiorari denied, 320 U. S. 746, aptly summarizes the reasons for refusing to accord weight to conclusionary testimony similar to that here involved, as follows:

> Uncontradicted testimony of a large number of employees to the effect that they were free from coercion and under no sense of constraint cannot avail the Independent, Bethlehem, etc. v. N. L. R. B., 1 Cir., 114 F. (2d) 930, 937, and American Enka Corp. v. N. L. R. B., 4 Cir., 119 F. (2d) 60, 62. and a showing of non-coercion in one instance does not disprove an affirmative showing of coercion in another instance, United States v. General Motors Corp., 7 Cir., 121 F. (2d) 376, 405. The recognition of constraint calls for a high degree of introspective perception, Bethlehem Shipbuilding case, supra, 114 F. (2d) 937, and it would be a rare case where the finders of fact could probe the precise factors of motivation underlying each employee's choice. Normally, the conclusion that the employees' choice was restrained by the employer's interference must of necessity be based on the existence of conditions or circumstances which the employer created or for which he was fairly responsible, and as a result of which it may reasonably be inferred that the employees did not have that complete and unfettered freedom of choice which the Act contemplates, N. L. R. B. v. Link-Belt Co., 311 U. S. 584, 588, 61 S. Ct. 358, 85 L. Ed. 368.[20]

Moreover, the conclusion of a witness as to whether conduct of the employer has coerced him or any other employee, like many types of lay opinion evidence, should be excluded in the interest of judicial and administrative efficiency. "A showing of non-coercion in one instance does not disprove an affirmative showing of coercion in another instance." Western Cartridge Co. v. Na-

[20] For similar rulings of other circuit courts of appeals, see National Labor Relations Board v. Brown Paper Mill Co., 108 F. 2d 867, 870, 871 (C. C. A. 5), certiorari denied, 310 U. S. 651; Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 114 F. 2d 930, 937 (C. C. A. 1), certiorari dismissed, 312 U. S. 710; American Enka Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 119 F. 2d 60, 62 (C. C. A. 4). But cf. National Labor Relations Board v. Swank Products, Inc., 108 F. 2d 872, 875 (C. C. A. 3).

Compare also National Labor Relations Board v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 308 U. S. 241, reversing 101 F. 2d 841, 847 (C. C. A. 4), and National Labor Relations Board v. Automotive Maintenance Machinery Co., 315 U. S. 282, reversing 116 F. 2d 350, 355-356 (C. C. A. 7), in which this Court reversed the circuit courts of appeals which had set aside Board orders of disestablishment on the ground that the employees desired to be represented by the labor organization which the Board found to be company dominated. Cf. National Labor Relations Board v. New Era Die Co., 118 F. 2d 500, 505 (C. C. A. 3), wherein the court upheld the Board in its refusal to permit the employer, who had refused to bargain with an accredited bargaining representative, to show by the testimony of his employees, who had revoked their authorizations of such representative, that they had done so voluntarily. This testimony the court held was "properly rejected as immaterial."

tional Labor Relations Board, 134 F. 2d 240, 244–245 (C. C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 320 U. S. 746; cf. National Labor Relations Board v. Trojan Powder Co., 135 F. 2d 337, 339 (C. C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 320 U. S. 768; United States v. General Motors Corp., 121 F. 2d 376, 405 (C. C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 314 U. S. 618. In this case, 32 employees testified that they were not coerced and the Company offered to prove that the remaining approximately 1,200 employees would have testified to the same effect (supra, pp. 6–7, 19). The Board on the other hand called several of the employees listed in the offer of proof who testified that employees were coerced (IX 3471, X 3497–3498, 3523–3528, 3552–3554, 3612, 3665–3670, 3691–3693–3703). If the Board is required to receive this testimony, it will be unable to limit those who testify on this question to any number short of the total number of employees. And if such testimony must be admitted, "an undue burden will be placed on the adversary to develop the facts on cross-examination." Note, Evidence Problems in N. L. R. B. Hearings and the Applicability of the Proposed Code of Evidence (1942), 55 Harv. L. Rev. 820, 826. Many months might be thus consumed in examining and cross-examining all the witnesses whom the Company might offer for this type of testimony. Unless such voluminous testimony could be of substantial value in deciding the issue involved, the necessary time and expense consumed would be wasted and the hearing of many unfair labor practice cases would be so delayed as to make largely ineffectual the Act's remedial provisions. Compare Section 10 (i), Appendix, infra, p. 110. In short, the Board is well within the bounds of an administrative discretion informed by experience when it excludes conclusionary testimony of the type here involved. Evidence of this sort is of too little probative value to outweigh the burdens attendant upon its admission.

In any event, the Company was not here prejudiced by the treatment which the Board accorded this testimony. As this Court, in Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 146, 163, pointed out, where evidence "would be of slight probative value" the Board might properly say "that accepting the offers of proof it would not alter the determination" of the question before the Board. Compare also the attitude of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in Wilson & Co., Inc. v. National Labor Relations Board, decided July 8, 1946, 18 L. R. R. M. 2198, 2200, toward background evidence rejected by the trial examiner as immaterial. The court said: "If this evidence were admitted and considered, it would not change the result here. Therefore, it is unnecessary to pass upon its admissibility."

B. THE PROPRIETY OF THE BOARD'S RETENTION OF THE SAME TRIAL EXAMINER TO PRESIDE AT THE HEARING ON REMAND

In holding that the trial examiner was disqualified to sit at the hearing on remand merely because, at the first hearing, he had expressed his opinion that the conclusionary testimony above discussed was immaterial (XIII 38–40, 51), the court below was clearly wrong. In the first place, if the Board is correct in its view that, under the facts of this case, such testimony is without probative force, then the court's ruling relative to the trial examiner must fall for that reason alone. But in any event, there was no more reason for disqualifying the trial examiner from presiding at the hearing on remand than there would be for disqualifying a judge who has ruled erroneously upon the materiality of evidence from hearing the same case on remand. It is well settled that a judge is not disqualified from presiding at a hearing because of his previous erroneous rulings in the case. Ex parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35; Berger v. United States, 255 U. S. 22, 23–24. The same doctrine applies to administrative proceedings. United States v. Morgan, 313 U. S. 409, 421.

Indeed, there is even less reason for disqualifying the trial examiner than there is for the disqualification of the judge in such circumstances. The trial examiner has no power to decide the case; he may only make recommendations to the Board. Section 10 (c) of the Act; National Labor Relations Board v. Air Associates, Inc., 121 F. 2d 586, 588–590 (C. C. A. 2); National Labor Relations Board v. Weirton Steel Co., 135 F. 2d 494, 496 (C. C. A. 3); National Labor Relations Board v. Botany Worsted Mills, 133 F. 2d 876, 882 (C. C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 319 U. S. 751; Consumers Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 113 F. 2d 38, 43 (C. C. A. 6). The Board may accept some or all of his recommendations or may reject all. In this case it accepted most, but not all of his recommendations. It expressly and independently ruled upon the weight and materiality of the evidence which the court below directed it to consider upon the remand. In short, it was the Board, not the trial examiner, who decided the case.

No better presiding officer could have been chosen than the examiner who conducted the initial proceedings. He was especially well qualified, for he was familiar with the company's operations, the names and identity of the persons involved, and the voluminous record at the previous hearing, which was a part of the entire record to be considered after the hearing on remand. He had observed the demeanor of the witnesses who testified at the first hearing and was therefore well qualified to decide the credibility of their testimony. Moreover, the trial examiner was familiar with the issues involved and the reason why the second hearing was being conducted. He was, accordingly, the logical person to be selected to preside at the second hearing.

III

THE COMPANY AND THE D. G. W. U. WERE NOT DEPRIVED OF DUE PROCESS BY REASON OF THE BOARD'S LIMITATION OF EVIDENCE AT THE HEARING ON REMAND TO THOSE MATTERS MENTIONED BY THE COURT BELOW AS HAVING BEEN ERRONEOUSLY EXCLUDED AT THE FIRST HEARING

In its first decision (123 F. 2d 215), the court below did not direct that there be a hearing de novo as to all issues presented by the pleadings, but only that the Company and the D. G. W. U. be afforded "an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner" (italics supplied) (id. at 225). The mandate remanded the case to the Board "for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of [the] court."[20a] The hearing on remand was therefore only a supplemental hearing and the trial examiner, whose action was approved by the Board in its decision (A 618), limited it rather strictly to the receipt of evidence which the court below had held was erroneously rejected at the first hearing (VII 2508–2519, VIII 2542–2564, 2788, IX 3276–3308). The only exception which he made to this limitation was in the case of Mrs. Reed, the Company's president, who had been unable to testify at the first hearing because of illness (VII 2064–2065, 2077–2092, 2151–2156). The hearing on remand was conducted upon the same complaint and answer without any amendment, and no new issues were therefore presented by the pleadings.

[20a] The mandate is unprinted but is on file with the Clerk of this Court.

The court below nevertheless ruled that the Company and the D. G. W. U. were denied due process by the trial examiner's refusal to receive certain evidence at the hearing on remand which the court deemed material but which it had not found was improperly rejected at the first hearing (XIII 46-51). This evidence falls into the following categories: (1) evidence not within the scope of the remand order by reason of the fact that it had not been rejected at the first hearing; (2) evidence rejected by the trial examiner at the first hearing as well as at the hearing on remand, the exclusion of which was not mentioned in the court's first opinion; and (3) evidence rejected at both hearings, the exclusion of which was approved by the court in its first opinion. The propriety of the Board's rejection of each of these categories will be discussed separately.

A. EVIDENCE NOT REJECTED AT FIRST HEARING

The evidence included in the first category—evidence which was either not offered or which was offered and received at the first hearing—related to (1) whether employees at other plants having duties similar to those of the supervisory employees who were active in the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. were eligible to membership in the I. L. G. W. U., and (2) whether certain union members discharged or laid off prior to the passage of the Act were discharged or laid off because of their union membership or activities.

1. Eligibility of supervisors to union membership.—No evidence was offered at the first hearing regarding the eligibility of any employees to membership in the I. L. G. W. U. At the hearing on remand, the trial examiner at first permitted counsel for the Company to call to the witness stand and question an official of the I. L. G. W. U. respecting the eligibility of instructors to membership in that union (VII 2507, VIII 2523–2527). When she testified that they were ineligible and counsel for the Company indicated that he intended to prove that they were eligible by showing numerous instances of their admission (VIII 2523–2527, 2529–2533, 2537–2540, 2543), the trial examiner struck all testimony he had received on that issue and refused to receive further evidence for the reason that it was not within the scope of the remand order and for the additional reason that it was immaterial to any issue in the case (VII 2508–2510, VIII 2559–2564, 2788, IX 3257, X 3787–3799).

Since such evidence was not offered at the first hearing, it could not fall within the purview of that evidence which the court below directed the Board to receive upon remand, that is, the "competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner" at the first hearing. The trial examiner made it clear at the hearing on remand—and we think properly so—that with the exception of testimony of Mrs. Reed, the Company's president, who was precluded on account of illness from testifying at the first hearing, he did not intend to receive any evidence except that mentioned in the opinion of the court below as having been improperly excluded by him at the first hearing (VIII 2596–2598, 2639–2641, 2786–2788–2791, 2802–2803, 2808–2809, IX 3182, 3259–3266, 3277–3288, 3307–3308, 3330–3334, 3439–3445, 3646–3649). Neither the Company nor the D. G. W. U. alleged that evidence regarding eligibility of supervisors to membership in the I. L. G. W. U. was newly discovered or unavailable at the first hearing nor offered any explanation for their failure to offer such evidence at that time. As this and other courts have recognized, "the proper administration of justice demands that there be an end to litigation. It demands that parties shall not present their causes of action or their defenses piecemeal." Sorensen v. Pyrate Corp., 65 F. 2d 982, 985 (C. C. A. 9). Accord: Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. 467, 481; United States Trust Co. v. New Mexico, 183 U. S. 535, 537, 540.

However, aside from the propriety of the trial examiner's exclusion of the evidence in question because it was not within the scope of the remand order, it was properly excluded because it was of only remote relevance to the issues of this case, which were whether the Company had engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8

(1), (2), and (3) of the Act. This Court has held that the membership of alleged supervisory employees in a nationally-affiliated union does not require the Board to disregard other evidence in the record tending to show employer responsibility for the acts and statements of those employees. International Association of Machinists v. National Labor Relations Board, 311 U. S. 72, 81. And in situations similar to that present in this case, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has twice held that eligibility of supervisors to membership in an affiliated labor organization does not preclude the Board from finding the employer responsible for participation by such supervisors in the formation and administration of an unaffiliated labor organization. New Idea, Inc. v. National Labor Relations Board, 117 F. 2d 517, 524 (C. C. A. 7); National Labor Relations Board v. Aintree Corp., 132 F. 2d 469, 472 (C. C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 318 U. S. 774. Similarly, it has been recognized that ineligibility of a supervisor to membership in an affiliated union is not a condition precedent to employer responsibility for his labor relations activities involving violations of sections of the Act other than Section 8 (2). See National Labor Relations Board v. John & Ollier Engraving Co., 123 F. 2d 589, 593 (C. C. A. 7); National Labor Relations Board v. Christian Board of Publication, 113 F. 2d 678, 682 (C. C. A. 8); National Labor Relations Board v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 118 F. 2d 780, 788 (C. C. A. 9).

Thus while these cases do not hold that evidence as to the eligibility to membership of alleged supervisory employees in nationally-affiliated unions is irrelevant to the issue of their supervisory status, they do serve to show that membership or eligibility to membership is by no means controlling. This being so, we believe it clear that, under the circumstances of this case, the proffered testimony could have been and was properly excluded on grounds of remoteness. The direct evidence in the record to show the supervisory status of the instructors was overwhelming (see supra, pp. 23–28); the testimony on this issue, introduced by both the Board and the Company was voluminous (see record references cited supra, pp. 23–28); and the Company's offers of proof on this issue related to employees holding allegedly comparable positions in plants other than the Donnelly plant (X 3788–3791) and, indeed, to some extent, in plants outside Kansas City (X 3791–3795). It was within the trial examiner's discretion, under the circumstances, to exclude the tendered evidence. Cf. Newman v. Clayton F. Summy Co., 133 F. 2d 465, 466–467 (C. C. A. 2).

2. Pre-Act discharges and lay-offs.—Other evidence not included within the scope of the remand order, the exclusion of which at the hearing on remand was held by the court below to constitute a denial of due process, related to whether or not certain employees discharged or laid off prior to the passage of the Act were discriminatorily discharged or laid off (XIII 47–48). During the first hearing, excerpts from the transcript of a hearing before the National Industrial Recovery Board which tried charges that the Company had discriminatorily discharged or laid off certain employees and also excerpts from the transcript of a hearing in an injunction suit before Federal District Judge Miller (infra, pp. 98–99) were introduced in evidence pursuant to a stipulation of the parties, and all other evidence offered by the Company to show that the discharges and lay-offs were nondiscriminatory was received (I 44a, 273, II 389–390c, 394–395, 399–401, 539, 550a, 707; III 728–729, 740–741, 1032–1055, 1057–1059, 1061–1090, 1096–1108, IV 1112cc–1112dd, 1119–1120w, 1120z–1129, 1130d–1160, 1276a, 1276g–1276m, 1316–1336, V 1368a–1374c, 1617–1619, Tr. 1891, 1964, 1967–1968, 1978, 2815): This matter not being within the scope of the remand order, the trial examiner, during the hearing on remand, refused to receive any further testimony with reference to it (VIII 2639, X 3783, 3792–3793), except the testimony of Mrs. Reed, the Company's president, who by reason of illness had been unable to testify at the first hearing (VII 2064–2065, 2069–2074, 2148–2151). In its decision, the Board expressly stated that it made no finding whether the discharges and lay-offs were, in fact, discriminatory (X 3860, n. 25). It used the evidence, along with evidence of the Company's pre-Act hostility to the I. L. G. W. U., merely to show a background in which employees became hesitant to join, admit membership in, or discuss the I. L. G. W. U. (X 3860–3861, 3863–3864).

The Company raised no question in regard to this evidence either before the Board or the court below prior to the hearing on remand other than an objection that it was immaterial and that some of it was hearsay (I 44a, III 1110a–1110c, V 1368). It has never alleged that any additional evidence which it may have on that subject is newly discovered or was unavailable at the first hearing.

B. EVIDENCE REJECTED AT FIRST HEARING BUT NOT MENTIONED IN FIRST OPINION OF COURT BELOW

The trial examiner, at the first hearing as well as at the hearing on remand, refused to receive evidence relating to whether the contract made by the Company with the D. G. W. U. contained provisions as beneficial to the employees as contracts made by other employers with the I. L. G. W. U. (I 201–207, 217, 238b–238c, II 378hh–380, VI 1653–1676, 1920, 1922, 1929–1930, VII 2507–2520, VIII 2521–2522, IX 3257, X 3789). In its answer to the complaint, the Company had alleged that its contract with the D. G. W. U. "provides for higher wages and more favorable conditions of employment than are contained in any contract which the" I. L. G. W. U. "has entered into with other garment manufacturers in this part of the country" (A 389–390). In refusing to receive the I. L. G. W. U. contracts during the first hearing, the trial examiner stated that so many factors entered into the wage rates and conditions of employment reflected in other contracts as to render any comparison useless without an investigation into all those other factors, and, furthermore, that he believed it material to show only how the terms of the D. G. W. U. contract were arrived at—whether or not by true collective bargaining—and not whether the terms were better or worse than those in other contracts (I 202–207, 238b–238c, II 378hh–380, VI 1920–1922, 1929–1930, 1985–1987).

Although the Company argued in its brief before the court below prior to the remand that it had been denied due process by the Board's refusal to receive the I. L. G. W. U. contracts, the court made no mention of the admissibility of such contracts in remanding the case to the Board. When the issue arose during the hearing on remand (VII 2507–2520), the trial examiner rejected a new offer of proof respecting the contracts (X 3789), ruling such evidence beyond the scope of the remand and also immaterial (IX 3257), but stating that he would receive testimony of any employee that she knew of such contracts and that her dissatisfaction with their terms led her to prefer the D. G. W. U. (VII 2514–2518, VIII 2521). He did receive such testimony (VIII 2593–2594, 2929–2931, IX 3080).

Although we recognize "that a judgment of reversal is not necessarily an adjudication by the appellate court of any other than the questions in terms discussed and decided" (Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Hill, 193 U. S. 551, 553–554), we believe that a reasonable interpretation of the first decision of the court below (123 F. 2d 215) warrants the conclusion that the court considered and rejected as without merit the Company's contention that it had been prejudiced by the trial examiner's exclusion of the testimony in question. Since the Company had complained of the trial examiner's rejection of evidence on numerous subjects, and the court below expressly considered and ruled upon the materiality of evidence on several of the subjects when remanding the case for a supplemental hearing for the purpose of receiving "all the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner" (123 F. 2d at 225) at the first hearing, there was nothing in the court's opinion which could have put the examiner on notice that any rejected evidence not mentioned in the opinion was considered by the court as competent and material. There still remain numerous rulings of the examiner on the admissibility of evidence, urged by the Company as prejudicial error in the court below, which have not been expressly passed upon by the court below in either its first or second opinion. Assuming arguendo that the examiner had committed various prejudicial errors, is it reasonable to assume that the court below would permit successive remands for the purpose of receiving only one type of admissible evidence at each remanded hearing, when one remand should suffice?

However, regardless of whether such evidence be considered within the scope of the remand order, we believe that its rejection was proper on the ground that it was immaterial to any issue in the case. The court below, in finding the exclusion of evidence regarding the contracts to be prejudicial error, apparently assumed that the Board found the substantive provisions of the contracts between the Company and the D. G. W. U. to be a "sham" (XIII 48–49). However, the Board made no such finding. It clearly considered the testimony regarding the D. G. W. U. contracts relevant only to show that there was no collective bargaining with respect to the provisions, to show that the provision placing a limitation upon the qualification to membership on the D. G. W. U.'s bargaining committee was included at the request of the Company, and to show, by the closed-shop and check-off provisions, an attempt by the Company to perpetuate its illegally constituted instrumentality for excluding bona fide labor organizations (supra, pp. 58–61, 70–71). As the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia said in Bethlehem Steel Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 120 F. 2d 641, 651 (App. D. C.), when confronted with a like argument by the employer, "these agreements were irrelevant" and neither the other employers nor the agreements which they made nor the charging union were "on trial." Had the Company, in the instant case, unilaterally posted a statement of policy setting forth wages and working conditions, the existence of bona fide I. L. G. W. U. contracts, containing similar terms, would not even have tended to refute the fact that the statement of policy was not arrived at through collective bargaining. That is equally true here where the so-called contract was the product of "negotiations" at which the employer sat on both sides of the bargaining table. In any event, this evidence, like that as to the eligibility of alleged supervisory employees to I. L. G. W. U. membership, was so remote as to make its exclusion a matter for the discretion of the trier of the facts. See supra, pp. 87–90.

C. EVIDENCE THE REJECTION OF WHICH WAS APPROVED IN THE FIRST OPINION OF THE COURT BELOW.

The third category of evidence, the rejection of which at the hearing on remand was found by the court below to deprive the Company and the D. G. W. U. of due process, related to misconduct of the I. L. G. W. U., the union which had filed charges in this case (XIII 44–50). The rejection of this evidence had been expressly approved by the court below in its first opinion (123 F. 2d 215, 225).

The evidence regarding misconduct of the I. L. G. W. U. was offered in support of allegations made in the Company's answer to the Board's complaint, in which it was alleged that the I. L. G. W. U. was engaged in a conspiracy to force the Company, by fraud and violence, to sign a closed-shop agreement with the I. L. G. W. U. (A 387–394). At the first hearing, although the Company and the D. G. W. U. had sought to introduce evidence that the I. L. G. W. U. had engaged in acts of violence at plants other than the Company's for the purpose of showing that the I. L. G. W. U. was attempting to use the Board's processes to injure the Company and for the purpose of showing the employees' reasons for forming or joining the D. G. W. U., the trial examiner ruled that the I. L. G. W. U. was not on trial and refused to receive testimony concerning violence by the I. L. G. W. U. unless the witness had personally encountered violence or had been personally threatened with violence (I 4, 190, 219–223, 334k–334l, 344q–344v, 366–367, II 553, 614, 627, 660–661, 700–703, 705, 718y, 718bb, 718aa, Tr. 69, 111, 114, 118, 2046–2047, 2468, 2583). The Company filed an offer of proof (II 704p, III 742d, IV 1156b–1306, V 1409–1619) which the trial examiner rejected (VI 1752). Although, in its first opinion, the court below upheld the trial examiner's refusal to "try" the I. L. G. W. U. "for alleged conspiracy" (123 F. 2d 215, 225), at the hearing on remand, the trial examiner nevertheless received all evidence offered through Mrs. Reed as to all she knew of any violence or threatened violence by the I. L. G. W. U. (VII 2077–2092, 2151–2156), as well as all evidence offered as to what the employees had seen, read, or heard regarding such violence by the I. L. G. W. U. which had occurred within a reasonable period prior to the formation of the D. G. W. U.—such evidence being considered relevant to show the employees' reasons for forming or joining the D. G. W. U. (VIII 2566–2568, 2624–2626, 2711–2713, 2768–2771, 2788, 2848–2851, 2915–2917, 3003–3006, 3046–3049, 3078–3081, 3120–3121, 3169–3171, 4102–4103, 4125–4169, 4173–4175). The reasonable period was fixed at six months at the suggestion of counsel for the Company. (VIII 2788, 2805–2809). The trial examiner considered irrelevant and refused to receive evidence as to whether any of the alleged violence at other plants actually occurred (VII 2512–2513, VIII 2540–2542, 2554–2555). There was no offer at either of the two hearings to show any fraud or violence at the Company's plant. It is this evidence of misconduct against other employers which the court below, in its second opinion, ruled material (XIII 44–50).

In that opinion, the court held that such evidence was relevant for the Board to consider (1) in determining whether charges were filed by the I. L. G. W. U. in good faith or for the purpose of influencing an injunction suit brought by the Company against the I. L. G. W. U. in a Federal District Court to prevent the I. L. G. W. U.

from carrying out threats to use violence in organizing the Company's plant (XIII 45–46),[21] and (2) in determining the reason why employees joined the Loyalty League and the D. G. W. U. (XIII 46–50).

The reversal by the court below of its position on the materiality of this evidence is apparently due to the interpretation it put (XIII 45) upon this Court's decision in National Labor Relations Board v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9, which was handed down subsequent to the first opinion in the instant case. During the progress of the hearing before the Board of the Indiana & Michigan case and at various times prior to the Board's decision, severe damage was done to the properties of the employer for which several prominent union leaders were subsequently indicted and convicted. Several of these leaders had been witnesses at the hearing before the Board. The employer sought to adduce additional evidence before the Board to show an unlawful conspiracy among the union leaders to intimidate and coerce the employer into settling the case then in the process of being heard and decided, and into recognizing the union as bargaining representative of its employees. The employer alleged that the unlawful destruction of its property was pursuant to the conspiracy thus to coerce and intimidate the employer in the defense of its case before the Board. This Court held that, under the circumstances, the unlawful conduct of the union leaders was material to a consideration of the weight and credibility of the testimony of these leaders as well as of the witnesses closely associated with them. It also held that, under the circumstances, the Board might wish to consider whether it should permit its processes to be taken advantage of by unions or by union leaders to advance their illegal purposes.

[21] See Donnelly Garment Co. v. International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, 20 F. Supp. 767 (W. D. Mo.), affirmed, 21 F. Supp. 807 (W. D. Mo.), reversed, 304 U. S. 243; 23 F. Supp. 998 (W. D. Mo.); 99 F. 2d 309 (C. C. A. 8), certiorari denied, 305 U. S. 662; 119 F. 2d 892 (C. C. A. 8); 121 F. 2d 561 (C. C. A. 8); 47 F. Supp. 61 (W. D. Mo.); Donnelly Garment Co. v. Dubinsky, 47 F. Supp. 65 (W. D. Mo.); Donnelly Garment Co. v. International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, 47 F. Supp. 67 (W. D. Mo.); 55 F. Supp. 572 (W. D. Mo.); Donnelly Garment Co. v. Dubinsky, 55 F. Supp. 587 (W. D. Mo.); International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union v. Donnelly Garment Co., 147 F. 2d 246 (C. C. A. 8), certiorari denied, 325 U. S. 852; Donnelly Garment Co. v. Dubinsky, 154 F. 2d 38 (C. C. A. 8). These cases mark the history of the Company's unsuccessful attempts to enjoin the I. L. G. W. U.

In the case at bar, there was no offer to prove that any of the witnesses had been convicted of any unlawful conduct against the Company or any other employer. And since none of the alleged unlawful conduct of union leaders in the case at bar occurred during or immediately preceding the hearing and other proceedings before the Board, it could not have been designed to intimidate the Company in the defense of its case before the Board as was allegedly true in the Indiana & Michigan case. The court below appears (XIII 46) to have felt that the excluded evidence of misconduct was admissible for the purpose of showing that the charges filed by the I. L. G. W. U. were designed to influence the result of the action for an injunction mentioned supra, pp. 98–99, but that is immaterial here where the Board was concerned only with determining whether the Company had engaged in unfair labor practices and with insuring to all parties a fair hearing on such issues. The Board issues a complaint only after its investigation shows that there is merit to the charges, and the motive of the I. L. G. W. U. in filing the charges cannot deprive the Board of jurisdiction to proceed. National Labor Relations Board v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9, 18; National Labor Relations Board v. Brown Paper Mill Co., 108 F. 2d 867, 872 (C. C. A. 5), certiorari denied, 310 U. S. 651; National Labor Relations Board v. Fickett-Brown Mfg. Co., Inc., 140 F. 2d 883, 884 (C. C. A. 5).

It is true, as this Court pointed out in the Indiana & Michigan case (318 U. S. at p. 19), that the Board might, in its discretion, withhold or dismiss its complaint "if it should appear that the charge was so related to a course of violence and destruction, carried on for the purpose of coercing an employer to help herd its employees into the complaining union, as to constitute an abuse of the Board's process." But no offer was made to show any violence or destruction or any other kind of misconduct at the Company's plant, and the Board does not feel that threats made by a union to call a strike—even a strike accompanied by violence upon the picket lines as was allegedly true at strike-bound plants in Kansas City—should bar it from issuing a complaint upon charges filed by the union making such threats. In the Indiana & Michigan case, this Court itself said that "the Board is not required to sidetrack proceedings involving an employer's violation of the labor law while it explores irrelevant derelictions of parties or witnesses or acts of unknown or irresponsible persons." 318 U. S. at 28.

As stated, supra, pp. 97–98, the trial examiner admitted in evidence all testimony of Mrs. Reed and of employees as to what they had seen; read, or heard regarding violence upon the picket lines at other plants where the I. L. G. W. U. had called strikes—the evidence of the employees being considered relevant to show their reasons for joining the I. L. G. W. U.—but he considered irrelevant and refused to receive other evidence as to whether such violence actually occurred. Taking cognizance of the Company's contentions relative to the alleged threats, the Board stated in its decision that "It may be true, as the [Company] contends, that many of them [the employees] feared the alleged threats of the I. L. G. W. U. but instead of permitting the employees to decide for themselves what attitudes they would adopt with regard to the I. L. G. W. U., the [Company] seized upon such fears as may have existed to build up and strengthen a militant employee opposition toward that labor organization" (X 3868–3869).

As Judge Woodrough pointed out in his dissenting opinion in this case, "the inquiry demanded in the proposed fields of controversy would only protract and distract. It could not illuminate. Employers may not commit the unfair labor practices such as charged in this case to prevent union electioneering even by labor unions that have a bad record behind them". (XIII 63). To require the Board to sidetrack the functions expressly delegated to it under the Act for the purpose of inquiring into alleged unlawful conduct of the charging union in situations such as those present in this case, would not only permit employers who have violated the Act to do so free of the sanctions of the Act whenever the organization filing the charge has been guilty of misconduct, but would greatly hamper the work of the Board by diverting its inquiries to collateral matters rather than to the merits of the unfair labor practice charges.

An inquiry by the Board into such collateral matters would, moreover, be inconsistent with this Court's admonition that "The Board acts in a public capacity to give effect to the declared public policy of the Act to eliminate and prevent obstructions to interstate commerce by * * * protecting the 'exercise by workers of full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing, * * *'." National Licorice Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 309 U. S. 350, 362; Phelps Dodge Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 177, 193. The I. L. G. W. U., because it filed charges, did not "become the actor in the proceeding." Amalgamated Utility Workers v. Consolidated Edison Co., 309 U. S. 261, 265. This function rested with the Board as the agency delegated by Congress to protect the public interest in suppressing unfair labor practices.

IV

THE BOARD'S ORDER SHOULD BE ENFORCED BY THIS COURT

As we have shown, supra, pp. 21–72, the Board's findings are supported by substantial evidence and its order is in all respects proper. Neither the Board's treatment of the evidence received nor its rejection of other evidence constituted prejudicial error or a denial of due process. See supra, pp. 73–104. The court below erred, therefore, in refusing to enforce the Board's order.[22]

This case has four times been argued before the court below over a period of more than four years.[23] Three opinions have been issued by that [22] Even if due process was not accorded, we believe that the court below nevertheless erred in setting aside and refusing to enforce the Board's order rather than remanding the case to the Board for the correction of such prejudicial errors as had been committed.

[23] On November 7, 1940, after oral argument on applications of the company and the D. G. W. U. for leave to adduce (1) evidence to show that they had been denied due process because of bias and prejudice on the part of the Board and its subordinates and collusion by them with the I. L. G. W. U., and (2) evidence going to the merits of the case, which had been excluded by the trial examiner and which they contended was competent and material, the court below handed down its opinion (7 L. R. R. M. 560), one judge dissenting, holding that the showing made by the Company and the D. G. W. U. as to the alleged bias and collusion was insufficient to invoke any action of the court, and denying the applications in that regard. It also denied the applications to adduce the excluded evidence allegedly going to the merits of the case, but did so without prejudice to a renewal of such applications when the case should be finally submitted to the court (see 123 F. 2d 215, 219–220). On May 21, 1941, oral argument was had on all issues except that which had been decided in the court's opinion of November 7, 1940. Thereafter, pursuant to a letter from Presiding Judge Archibald K. Gardner, dated July 24, 1941, requesting additional briefs on the bias and court but it has not yet passed upon the substantiality of the evidence supporting the Board's findings (7 L. R. R. M. 560; 123 F. 2d 215; XIII 7–64). "This court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, has power not only to correct error in the judgment entered below, but to make such disposition of the case as justice may at this time require." Watts, Watts & Co. v. Unione Austrica Etc., 248 U. S. 9, 21. And this Court has, in other Labor Board cases, passed on the substantiality of the supporting evidence even though the circuit court of appeals had not done so. National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U. S. 1, 29, reversing, 83 F. 2d 998 (C. C. A. 5); National Labor Relations Board v. Fruehauf Trailer Co., 301 U. S. 49, 57, reversing 85 F. 2d 391 (C. C. A. 6). To avoid further delay in a case which has been before the Board and the courts for more than seven years (A 369), we respectfully request that, in addition to reversing the court below on the due process issues presented, this Court pass on the sufficiency of the evidence and enforce the Board's order in toto.

---

collusion question decided by the court on November 7, 1940, the parties filed additional briefs and re-argued that question before the court on September 6, 1941. The case was again argued before the court below just prior to its decision of October 29, 1945 (XIII 6).

CONCLUSION

The decree of the court below should be reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to enforce the order of the Board in full.

Respectfully submitted.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
Solicitor General.

STANLEY M. SILVERBERG,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

GERHARD P. VAN ARKEL,
General Counsel,
MORRIS P. GLUSHIEN,
Associate General Counsel,
RUTH WEYAND,
FANNIE M. BOYLS,
Attorneys,
National Labor Relations Board.

SEPTEMBER 1946.

APPENDIX

National Labor Relations Act (Act of July 5, 1935, c. 372, 49 Stat. 449, 29 U. S. C. 151, et seq.):

* * * * * *

RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES

SEC. 7. Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

SEC. 8. It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer—

(1) To interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7;

(2) To dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it * * *

(3) By discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization: Provided, That nothing in this Act, or in the National Industrial Recovery Act (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, secs. 701–712), as amended from time to time, or in any code or agreement approved or prescribed thereunder, or in any other statute of the United States, shall preclude an employer from making an agreement with a labor organization (not established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined in this Act as an unfair labor practice) to require as a condition of employment membership therein, if such labor organization is the representative of the employees as provided in section 9 (a), in the appropriate collective bargaining unit covered by such agreement when made.

* * * * *

PREVENTION OF UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

SECTION 10. (a) The Board is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unfair labor practice (listed in section 8) affecting commerce. * * *

(b) Whenever it is charged that any person has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, the Board, or any agent or agency designated by the Board for such purposes, shall have power to issue and cause to be served upon such person a complaint stating the charges in that respect, and containing a notice of hearing before the Board or a member thereof, or before a designated agent or agency, at a place therein fixed, not less than five days after the serving of said complaint. * * *

(c) * * * If upon all the testimony taken the Board shall be of the opinion that any person named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, then the Board shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such unfair labor practice, and to take such affirmative action, including reinstatement of employees with or without back pay, as will effectuate the policies of this Act. * * *

* * * * *

(e) * * * The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. * * *

* * * * *

(i) Petitions filed under this Act shall be heard expeditiously, and if possible within ten days after they have been docketed.

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1946

FILE COPY

OCT 31 1946

Nos. 38 and 39

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1946

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, PETITIONER

v.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER

v.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

ON WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

INDEX

	Page
I. The Board properly limited to eleven the number of employee witnesses whom the Company and the D. G. W. U. were permitted to call during the hearing on the remand	2
II. The Company and the D. G. W. U. were permitted at both hearings to introduce evidence and examine witnesses respecting all subjects as to which the Board and the I. L. G. W. U. introduced evidence	5
III. The Board's findings are sustained by substantial evidence	10
A. The April 27, 1937 meeting	11
B. The alleged meeting of March 30, 1937	15
IV. The Board properly ordered reimbursement of dues checked off to the D. G. W. U.	18

CITATIONS

Cases:

National Labor Relations Board v. Baltimore Transit Co., 140 F. 2d 51, certiorari denied, 321 U. S. 795 19

Virginia Electric & Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 319 U. S. 533 18

Miscellaneous:

American Law Institute, Model Code of Evidence, Rule 105 (c) 5

6 Wigmore, Evidence (3rd ed.), secs. 1907–1908 5

719840—46——1

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1946

No. 38

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, PETITIONER

v.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY; DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION

No. 39

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER

v.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

ON WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Pursuant to leave granted at the oral argument in this case, this reply brief is filed in order that there be no misunderstanding of the record which would prevent final disposition of this protracted litigation.

I

THE BOARD PROPERLY LIMITED TO ELEVEN THE NUMBER OF EMPLOYEE WITNESSES WHOM THE COMPANY AND THE D. G. W. U. WERE PERMITTED TO CALL DURING THE HEARING ON THE REMAND

The D. G. W. U., in its brief (pp. 5, 27, 29, 33, 61, 69), argues that the Board failed to comply with the remand of the court below because it did not, during the hearing held pursuant to remand, receive any of the witnesses offered by the D. G. W. U. on its examination in chief, and because it limited to eleven the number of employee witnesses the Company was permitted to call. The court below rejected both of these arguments. It said (XIII 41):

> Although the plant union complains that the Trial Examiner heard none of the employee testimony proffered by it, it is apparent that this testimony would have been no different than the testimony of the eleven witnesses produced by the Company and that the testimony received was for the benefit of both. * * * We are satisfied that the Examiner was justified in limiting the number of witnesses as he did.

Actually six of the eleven employee witnesses called by the Company were also named in the

D. G. W. U.'s offers of proof (Oma Cooper, whose earlier name, Holloway, VIII 2564, appeared on the offer III 767; Lois Barnes, III 771; Edith Dean, III 779; Ethel Riegel, III 773; Lydia Phillips, III 787; Alice Freed, III 779), and counsel for the D. G. W. U. examined each of the eleven witnesses extensively as to all matters set forth in its offers of proof.[1] The trial examiner made it clear throughout that he regarded these witnesses as produced by both the Company and the D. G. W. U. (IX 3179, 3183–3184, 3186, 3202, 3251, 3254–3255). And after the con-

[1] The following is a tabulation of the number of typewritten pages consumed by the respective examinations of each of these eleven witnesses by counsel for the Company and by counsel for the D. G. W. U. with supporting references to the printed record:

Name of witness	Number of typewritten pages of examination
	By the Company	Record References	By D. G. W. U.	Record References
1. Oma Cooper	62	VIII 2564-2592	19	VIII 2592-2600
2. Hazel Saucke	48	VIII 2623-2641	51	VIII 2641-2665
3. Mary Warth	43	VIII 2709-2726, 2749-2752.	26	VIII 2726-2732, 2752-2754, 2760-2767.
4. Lois Barnes	87	VIII 2767-2814, 2845.	17	VIII 2814-2822, 2846-2847.
5. Edith Dean	40	VIII 2848-2868	22	VIII 2868-2879
6. Jessie Mudd	42	VIII 2911-2934, 3000, IX 3001	29	VIII 2934-2947, IX 3001.
7. Ethel Riegel	34	IX 3002-3020	13	IX 3020-3027.
8. Ruby Clayton	28	IX 3045-3057	20	IX 3057-3066.
9. Lydia Phillips	31	IX 3076-3094	13	IX 3094-3099
10. Louise Garrett	30	IX 3119-3135, 3166-3168.	26	IX 3135-3147, 3168-3169.
11. Alice Freed	64	IX 3169-3206, 3248-3249.	24	IX 3206-3219
Total pages	509		260

clusion of the testimony of the eleventh employee witness, counsel for the D. G. W. U. expressly conceded that he had no witness to offer whose testimony would differ from that of those already produced (IX 3273).

The trial examiner acted within a proper exercise of his discretion in limiting the Company and the D. G. W. U. to eleven witnesses respecting the matters covered by their offers. He imposed a similar limitation upon the Board and the I. L. G. W. U. During the examination of the sixth witness called by the Board during the hearing upon remand, the trial examiner ruled that any further witnesses would be cumulative, that he would treat the witnesses called by the Board as included in the number the I. L. G. W. U. would be entitled to offer, and applying the same restriction to counsel for the I. L. G. W. U. that he applied to counsel for the D. G. W. U., would refuse to hear further witnesses for the Board or the I. L. G. W. U. (Tr. 6623; cf. X 3676).[2] The authorities are all agreed that a limitation such as eleven witnesses on each side of an issue is entirely proper, where the limitation is so imposed that neither party is caught with some of his best witnesses withheld.[3] Here both the Company and the D. G. W. U. were aware from the beginning of the hearing on remand that the Board did not contemplate hearing an unlimited number of witnesses. Moreover, at the time the trial examiner stopped them, counsel for the Company also admitted that he had no witness who would add anything different from the eleven who had already testified (IX 3272–3273).

[2] On none of the points covered by the Company or the D. G. W. U. had the combined number of witnesses called by the Board and the I. L. G. W. U. on the first and second hearings exceeded eleven. This fact can be verified by checking the number of witnesses to whom reference is made in the statement of evidence supporting the Board's findings in the Board's main brief in this case, pp. 21–66.

II

THE COMPANY AND THE D. G. W. U. WERE PERMITTED AT BOTH HEARINGS TO INTRODUCE EVIDENCE AND EXAMINE WITNESSES RESPECTING ALL SUBJECTS AS TO WHICH THE BOARD AND THE I. L. G. W. U. INTRODUCED EVIDENCE

In their briefs, the Company (pp. 69–71), and the D. G. W. U. (p. 71), assert that the Board was permitted to question employees about events occurring prior to November 1936, while the Company and the D. G. W. U. were not permitted to put on any evidence as to events occurring that early. The court below held that the Board should have permitted the Company and the D. G. W. U. to introduce evidence to answer the Board's evidence that the Company had discriminated against I. L. G. W. U. members in 1934 and 1935 (XIII 47–48). In the Board's [3] See discussion and cases collected in 6 Wigmore, Evidence (3rd ed.) secs. 1907–1908. Cf. American Law Institute, Model Code of Evidence, Rule 105 (c).

MICRO CARD
TRADE MARK ®
22
MATTHEW BENDER & COMPANY
MB
4946
1900
microcard

main brief (pp. 90–92) we have collected the record references showing that at the first hearing the Company was allowed to and did offer all the evidence it wished to meet these charges and at the hearing on remand was allowed unrestricted examination of Mrs. Reed on this issue.[4] The trial examiner refused during the hearing on remand to permit the Board to introduce any evidence as to the matters covered by the N. R. A. hearing. Indeed, he even refused to permit the Board to rebut the testimony given by Mrs. Reed during the hearing on remand which pertained to this issue (IX 3439–3445, X 3645–3649).

[4] The Company in its brief (pp. 75–76, 136, 137–138), accuses the Board of having dismissed all portions of its complaint pertaining to the pre-Act discharges but nevertheless making findings with respect thereto. As the trial examiner's rulings clearly demonstrate, he was dismissing only the allegations that the Company committed unfair labor practices by refusing after the Act became effective to reemploy persons earlier discharged (see allegations in the motion to amend the complaint, A 431–433), but was not ruling that the discharges in 1934 and 1935 were not still in issue insofar as they indicated the Company's hostility to the I. L. G. W. U. Thus, when this amendment to the complaint was offered, the trial examiner said he would withhold ruling on the motions to strike these allegations from the complaint until the parties could work out their offers of proof of the evidence taken in the N. R. A. hearing (Tr. 216–221). Counsel for the Company and the D. G. W. U. thereafter entered into a stipulation with the Board whereby each of the parties placed in the record excerpts from the N. R. A. and Judge Miller hearings in lieu of retrying de novo the issue of the Company's hostility to the I. L. G. W. U. in 1934 and 1935 (I 44–44a,

During the hearing on remand, the trial examiner permitted the Company and the D. G. W. U. to question and they did question the eleven employee witnesses produced under their offers of proof with respect to the organization of the Loyalty League at the Company's plant in February 1935 (VIII 2632–2633, 2666, 2718, 2727, 2734, 2777–2778, 2827, 2829–2830, 2859, 2861, 2927, IX 3010–3011, 3030–3032, 3052, 3066–3067, 3090), and to the asserted change in the status of the instructors when Bate became production manager in July 1935 (VIII 2812, 2830, 2861–2864, 2933, IX 3001). These were the only events occurring 273, II 389–390c, III 740–741; Tr. 315–317, 1746–1748, 1964). When counsel for the Company expressed doubt as to what he had to meet in the N. R. A. evidence, the trial examiner told him to bring in any evidence he was in doubt about and it would be ruled on (Tr. 1891). The trial examiner likewise made it clear that although he felt the Company should abide by its stipulation to put in pre-Act events by excerpts from previous hearings, if the Company wanted to put on additional witnesses they would be heard (II 394–395). And he did receive such testimony (II 398–401, Tr. 1907, 1967–1978, 1992–1993, 2009–2021). That the Company was not confused by the trial examiner's rulings is conclusively demonstrated by the extensive excerpts from the N. R. A. and Judge Miller hearings pertaining to the discharges in 1934 and 1935 which, subsequent to these rulings, it introduced in evidence (III 1110c–IV 1305, VI 1751–1753). Counsel for the Company, during the hearing on remand, asserted that the Company, during the first hearing, met all the evidence introduced by the Board from the N. R. A. record (IX 3443–3444). Nor has the Company ever shown that it had any specific evidence on these issues other than that already received.

prior to November 1936 as to which the Board was permitted to question witnesses during the hearing on remand, the Board being limited even as to these matters to cross-examination of the witnesses produced by the Company and the D. G. W. U. or to rebuttal of the testimony of employee witnesses produced by the Company and the D. G. W. U. (IX 3276–3311, 3427–3429, 3439–3445, X 3559–3571, 3573–3580, 3646–3649, 3673–3674).

In dealing with the admissibility of evidence that the I. L. G. W. U. allegedly admits instructors to union membership (Co. Br., pp. 80–86),[5] the Company attempts to create the impression that the issue of the supervisory status of instructors was not tried at the first hearing, but came into the case only when the Board, after rejecting the Company's evidence on the remand, itself put in extensive testimony as to whether employees regarded instructors as supervisors (Co. Br., pp. 84–85). Actually the issue of the supervisory status of the instructors was fully litigated at the original hearing (I 15–20, 22–24a, 25, 41, 135–139,

[5] In the course of this discussion, the Company lists among those whom it says the Board found to be representatives of management "Examiners" (Co. Br., p. 80) and the "inspectors" (Co. Br., p. 81) and cites Board cases to show that the Board on other occasions has held examiners and inspectors not to be supervisors (Co. Br., pp. 82–83). Actually the Board made no finding in the instant case that examiners or inspectors were supervisors or representatives of management, there never having been any claim made in this case that they were.

191–192, 239, 299–302, II 391–392, 411–412, 414–415, 419–423, 426–429, 450–453, 490–493, 504–512, 515, 517–519, 670, III 734c, 734g, 734j, 734k). When the first employee witness called by the Company and the D. G. W. U. during the hearing on remand was questioned with respect to the supervisory status of the instructors (VIII 2584), counsel for the Board objected to the question as not within the scope of the remand (VIII 2584–2586). The trial examiner ruled that he would construe the offers as permitting the employee witnesses to give their opinion of the instructors' supervisory status (VIII 2586) and each of the eleven employee witnesses called by the Company and the D. G. W. U. were permitted to testify as to his opinion of the instructors' status (VIII 2586–2587, 2604–2606, 2731, 2734, 2812, 2830, 2843–2844, 2861–2864, 2933–2934, 2956–2969, IX 3001, 3019, 3059–3060, 3092, 3103–3104, 3122, 3153, 3206–3207).[6] It was only thereafter that the attorney for the Board was permitted by way of rebuttal to call as witnesses the two instructors under whom the majority of the employees called by the Company and the D. G. W. U. had worked in March and April 1937,[7] and to question them as to whether they regarded themselves and were regarded by others as having supervisory status at that time (IX 3320–3328, 3397–3398, 3410–3412, 3434). Thereafter, the attorney for the Board also called in rebuttal three employees who had worked in these sections at that time and similarly questioned them (IX 3470, X 3481–3483, 3551, 3554–3556, 3662, 3673–3675).

[6] The Company, in its brief (pp. 143, 144, 148, 150), repeatedly emphasizes that the instructors were not "over" the operators. However, in referring to instructors and thread girls, employees called by the Company and the D. G. W. U. continually spoke in terms of "worked under" or "worked for" her (VIII 2602, 2605, 2611–2613, 2680, 2948, IX 3034, 3059).

III

THE BOARD'S FINDINGS ARE SUSTAINED BY SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

Despite the vigorous attacks made by the Company (Br., pp. 99–196) and the D. G. W. U. (Br., pp. 92–125) upon the Board's findings, we submit that the evidence cited in the Board's brief (pp. 22–71) affords full support for each finding there set forth. It would serve no good purpose to make a detailed defense of each citation attacked. We merely wish to urge the Court to examine even references which the Company asserts contain no mention of the subject for which they are cited. For instance, on page 130

[7] Eight of the eleven employee witnesses called by the Company and the D. G. W. U. testified that they had worked in the sections of Instructor Dorsey or Skeens at approximately this time (VIII 2607, 2676–2677, 2733, 2823, 2892, IX 3034–3035, 3059, 3074, 3097), and Dorsey (IX 3274–3276, 3310–3312) and Skeens (IX 3429) in turn testified that these girls were working in their respective sections at this time.

of the Company's brief, it is asserted that "At II, 588, there is nothing said about the letter" although in fact on II, 588, it appears that Atherton, a witness called by the Company, during the course of cross-examination, twice volunteered information respecting the reading of the letter in exact accord with the finding of the Board which the Company is at that page of its brief attacking.[8]

However, with respect to certain of the findings under attack, the corroborative details of the supporting evidence may not be apparent by an examination of the citations to the supporting evidence as set out in our main brief. We, therefore, wish to set out such details as to a few of the most controverted findings.

A: THE APRIL 27, 1937, MEETING

Rose Todd, who presided at the April 27, 1937, meeting and became president of the D. G. W. U. (III 821–830), claimed to have called the meeting by having the Company's telephone operators phone each section of the plant on the interdepartmental phones (V 1274d). She testified that it is the duty of the instructor or thread girl to answer the phone and convey any message received to the girls in her section and that this was done on April 27th (V 1374d).[9] McConaughey, treasurer of the D. G. W. U. (II 692) and the first witness called by the D. G. W. U., testified that the telephone operator called his department and asked that people in the department be informed of the meeting (II 704g). Collins, an instructor called as a witness by the Company, remembered that the message was taken by either herself or the thread girl (II 667, 669). Instructors Dorsey and Skeens both testified that they received such a phone call on April 27th and notified the employees in their section that they were to attend the meeting (IX 3276, 3309–3312, 3315–3316, 3397–3399, 3430–3434, 3467). Operators Fike, Copenhaver, Weilert and Stevens each testified that she was sent to the meeting by her instructor (I 328c–328d, IX 3470, X 3551, 3619–3621, 3667). In view of Todd's testimony that she used this method of calling the meeting, corroborated by such a wealth of additional testimony, the Company's belittling (Co. Br., pp. 104–107) of the Board's finding that employees were notified of the April 27th meeting by their instructors (X 3872), seems completely unjustified.

[8] It is to be noted that in one of its offers of proof (III 785) the D. G. W. U. also sought to establish the facts respecting the reading of this letter to be just as the Board found them. When one of the witnesses whose name purports to be attached to this offer (III 787) was called as a witness by the Company, she testified contrary to the offer (IX 3086–3087, 3110–3119) and then denied her signature (IX 3111–3112).

[9] In an effort to mitigate the effect of the testimony that Todd used interdepartmental phones to call meetings of the D. G. W. U., the Company questioned the first employee witness called by it during the hearing on remand as to whether employees could freely use the phones at the Company's plant and she testified that they could (VIII 2587). On cross-examination of this witness it became clear that the only phones employees could use were public phones on the second and seventh floors, and that there were always long lines of employees waiting to use these phones (VIII 2621–2622). The interdepartmental phones could only be used by supervisory employees for Company business (IX 3342, X 3672).

The Board's finding that the April 27th meeting was held during working hours (X 3867, n. 33, 3872) is sustained by the direct testimony of Instructors Dorsey and Skeens, who testified not only that the meeting was during working hours but that they had seen entries on the pay roll records disclosing that piece work employees were paid for the time they spent in attendance at this meeting (IX 3312–3315, 3329–3330, 3337, 3408–3410, 3430–3431, 3434, 3465–3468).[10] Operators Fike, Copenhaver, Weilert and Stevens also testified that this meeting was held during working hours (I 328c–328e, IX 3470–3471, X 3530–3532, 3541–3544, 3551, 3620–3621, 3667). The Company's pay roll shows that during the last two weeks of April 1937, the plant instructors and thread girls were paid for 26 hours overtime or 53 hours of work a week (III 1003–1004), and a thread girl called as a witness by the Company conceded that instructors and thread girls were never paid overtime except when their section also was working the additional hours (VIII 2986–2989).

[10] The Company produced no payroll records to controvert this testimony although it had the records for this period (XII 4204–4321).

The Board's finding that this meeting was held during working hours is moreover corroborated by the testimony that all of the meetings of plant employees during March,[11] April, and May, 1937 were held during working hours and that employees were paid for time spent attending these meetings (I 309, 328c–328d, IX 3312–3315, 3328–3330, 3408–3411, 3414, 3431, 3434, 3449–3451, 3458, 3465–3467, X 3543, 3669–3670).[12] Witnesses recalled numerous incidents which could not possibly have occurred had these meetings been held after working hours. For instance, there is Stevens' testimony that because she was the first [11] Rose Todd herself never testified that the March 18, 1937 meeting was after working hours. Indeed, when questioned as to whether she got permission to hold this meeting during working hours, she did not deny it was held during working hours but stated that she had not asked permission and didn't know whether anyone else had secured permission (I 49).

[12] While Instructors Dorsey and Skeens were not able to be certain whether some of these were D. G. W. U. meetings rather than Loyalty League meetings (IX 3314–3315, 3361, 3363, 3454–3455), their uncertainty does not detract from their testimony but merely reinforces the Board's findings that the March 18 and April 27 meetings were sponsored by the Loyalty League and, in view of Rose Todd's presidency of the League and its use of the same system of calling meetings and the same meeting place, employees in attending the March 18 and April 27 meetings would reasonably be subject to all the compulsions inhering in Loyalty League activities (X 3867, 3868, 3872, 3875, n. 44, 3886). See also the minutes of the meeting of the D. G. W. U. on May 27, 1937, which was immediately followed by a Loyalty League meeting (III 952–958, I 354d–354g, 365, 368–369, II 378a–378d, X 3661). Cf. X 3662.

employee back at work following one of these meetings, her instructor accused her of not having been present (X 3670). The instructor named by Stevens was not called to deny this incident. Instructor Skeens also recalled going back to work after several D. G. W. U. meetings (IX 3450, 3458). Then there is the testimony of Instructor Dorsey that she reassured girls who did not wish to attend the meetings that they would be paid, and that then the girls went without complaint (IX 3410). Instructor Dorsey also recalled putting away the work of certain of the girls in her section on one occasion when the meeting began during working hours but did not finish until closing time (IX 3363, 3410–3411, 3414). The witnesses called by the Board remembered wearing their uniforms to the March 18, April 27 and some four or five other D. G. W. U. meetings held during April or May (I 328d, IX 3312, 3317, 3363, 3410, 3430, 3434, 3470–3471, X 3502–3503, 3530, 3551, 3666, 3667).[13]

B. THE ALLEGED MEETING OF MARCH 30, 1937

Both the Company (Br., pp. 20–21, 92–93, 117) and the D. G. W. U. (Br., pp. 19, 106–107) vigor-

[13] A newspaper picture of the May 11, 1937 meeting shows all visible persons to be in uniform (XI 4099, IX 3473–3474), although many witnesses called by the Company and the D. G. W. U., in explaining that all meetings were after work, described how they and many other employees changed into street clothes before the meetings (VIII 2572, 2728, 2818, IX 3060, 3099).

ously attack the Board's finding that no meeting took place on March 30, 1937 (X 3873, n. 42). In resolving the conflicts of testimony respecting this meeting, the Board pointed to the following evidence: None of the witnesses called by the Board remembered any meeting prior to April 27, 1937, at which funds were raised to pay Mr. Tyler a fee (I 332, IX 3316–3317, 3432, X 3552). Instead, they fixed the March 18, 1937 meeting as the one preceding the April 27, 1937 meeting (X 3666–3667). Rose Todd, who first testified that there was such a meeting, explained it as the source of the funds used to pay Tyler's fee (I 177–180) and did not disclose what later became apparent when bank records were introduced, that she had borrowed $1,000 from the First National Bank and that the check for $500 given Tyler on April 1, 1937 actually came from this source (II 378m–378p, II 556–557, III 949, 959, I 279–280). Moreover, the Board produced minutes of a meeting held on May 27, 1937 which shows that it was at a Loyalty League meeting on this date that employees decided to contribute 50 cents apiece to reimburse the Loyalty League treasury for the amount paid to Tyler (III 954–95[illegible] I 354d–354g, 365, 368–369, II 378a–378d, X 3671). The Company and the D. G. W. U. at first sought to discredit these minutes by producing records of the Loyalty League to show that $623.20 which its treasurer claimed had been contributed by employees in 50-cent donations was deposited in the bank on May 13, 1937 (II 378s–378z, III 991, Tr. 1775–1789, 1792–1796). However, upon obtaining the bank records, it was established that the sum of $623.30 was deposited on July 13, 1937 (III 960, II 384, Tr. 1775–1779, 1841–1842).

The testimony of the witnesses called by the Company and the D. G. W. U. was obviously based upon these employees' assumption years later that they must have contributed the money before the check was given to Tyler on April 1, 1937, as none of them had ever been told of Rose Todd's borrowing of the money (VIII 2698, IX 3040, 3075–3076, 3165, 3242, 3247–3248). Thus Saucke, who testified at the trial that she had never heard of Todd's loan from the bank (VIII 2698), claimed that she moved the assessment at the meeting on or about March 30 for paying the fees (VIII 2630–2631, 2668–2669, 2672–2673, 2697–2698). When Saucke was first examined on cross as to whether she made a motion in March 1938 to assess each employee a dollar to pay Mrs. Tyler's fees, she had no recollection of making such a motion, but when confronted with the minutes of the March 1938 meeting showing such a motion, she claimed to remember that she had made such a motion both in March 1937 and again in March 1938 (VIII 2672–2674, 2679, 2695, III 866–868). It seems probable that she only made the motion in 1938 and had just confused the year when trying to recollect in 1942 the facts of such earlier events.

IV

THE BOARD PROPERLY ORDERED REIMBURSEMENT OF DUES CHECKED-OFF TO THE D. G. W. U.

The Company (Br., pp. 194–195) attempts to distinguish the instant case from Virginia Electric & Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 319 U. S. 533, wherein this Court sustained the Board's power to order reimbursement of dues checked off to a company dominated union in which membership was coerced by a closed-shop contract. The Board in this case found (X 3893–3894) that—

> The check-off agreement, a device by which the respondent assured the financial stability of the dominated organization, could, as practiced, no more be avoided by the employees than could the compulsory membership requirement. * * * the monies thus deducted from the wages of the employees constituted the price of retaining their jobs, a price coerced from them for respondent's purpose of supporting and maintaining the organization which respondent had dominated in order to thwart bona fide representation. * * * as a result of the imposition of the illegal closed-shop and check-off requirements, the employees suffered a definite loss and deprivation of wages equal to the amounts exacted from them for illegal purposes.

These findings are fully sustained. The check-off authorizations were all entered into subsequent to the signing of the closed-shop agreement (see Bd. Br., pp. 60–61). They were prepared by the Company and signed in the plant at the desk of Rose Todd (I 226–227, 233–234, 262–263) a management representative and supervisory employee (see Bd. Br., pp. 28–32). There was testimony by employees that they did not sign such papers freely because they felt that if they didn't sign all such documents or pay their dues they would lose their jobs (X 3528, cf. IX 3471, X 3612, 3665, 3667). Cf. National Labor Relations Board v. Baltimore Transit Co., 140 F. 2d 51, 56–59 (C. C. A. 4), certiorari denied, 321 U. S. 795.

Respectfully submitted,

J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
Solicitor General.

STANLEY M. SILVERBERG,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

GERHARD P. VAN ARKEL,
General Counsel,

MORRIS P. GLUSHIEN,
Associate General Counsel,

RUTH WEYAND,
FANNIE M. BOYLS,
Attorneys,
National Labor Relations Board.

OCTOBER 1946.

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1946

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1945.

No. 786.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, PETITIONER,
VS.
DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, A CORPORATION; DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION; AND INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT, DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, IN OPPOSITION.

ROBERT J. INGRAHAM,
BURR S. STOTTLE,
Attorneys for Respondent, Donnelly Garment Company.

REED, INGRAHAM & MILLIGAN,
Of Counsel.

INDEX

Opinions Below 1
Jurisdiction 2
The Facts and Issues 2
Petitioner's Statement of Facts 2
Petitioner's Statement of the Issues 3
The Real Issues 4
Summary of Argument 4

Argument—

I. The Court Below Did Not Abuse Its Power and Discretion in Refusing Enforcement of the Board's Order 6

(a) The court below was "not in error" in ruling that the Board should have received and considered the proffered evidence 8

(1) Evidence of conspiracy by ILGWU 8

(2) Refusal of Board to consider employees' testimony as directed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in its former decision 10

(3) Failure to receive evidence as to events in 1934-35 14

(4) Failure to receive evidence of provisions of ILGWU contracts 14

(5) Refusal to receive evidence that Instructors, Thread Girls and other employees of respondent, held by the Board to be Supervisory Employees, were not so considered in trade unions generally, including the ILGWU itself, but were eligible to union membership 15

(6) Refusal to permit respondent to examine Wave Tobin as to threats and violence of ILGWU, and concerning eligibility of "Instructors," etc., to participate in unions, and generally 19

(b) The court was not in error in ruling that the Board should have designated a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing 19

(c) In any event, the court's rulings were not so completely wrong as to constitute an abuse of its judicial power and discretion 20

II. The Decision of the Court Below Does Not Involve Questions of Such Importance or Character As to Call for the Issuance of Certiorari by This Court 22

III. The Decision Below Does Not Conflict with Decisions of This Court or with Decisions of Other Circuits 23

Conclusion 31

TABLE OF CASES

Berger vs. United States, 255 U. S. 22 27
Bethlehem Steel Co. vs. NLRB, 120 F. 2d 641 23, 28
Consolidated Edison Co. vs. NLRB, 305 U. S. 197, 226 13
De Bardeleben vs. NLRB, 135 F. 2d 13, 14-15 12
Donnelly Garment Co. vs. NLRB, 123 F. 2d 215 10
Donnelly Garment Co. vs. NLRB, 151 F. 2d 854 (XIII,) 1
Dortch Stove Works, Inc., 58 NLRB No. 82 18
Ex Parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35, 44 20, 27
Ford Motor Co. vs. NLRB, 305 U. S. 364, 373 31
Humble Oil & Refining Co. vs. NLRB, 113 F. 2d 85, 91 12, 25

Industrial Rayon Corporation, 56 NLRB No. 104 18
International Assoc. of Machinists vs. NLRB, 311 U. S. 72, 80 16, 21
Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., 53 NLRB No. 170 18
NLRB vs. Aintree Corporation, 132 F. 2d 469 28
NLRB vs. Air Associates, Inc., 121 F. 2d 586, 589, 590 25
NLRB vs. Botany Worsted Mills, 133 F. 2d 876, 882 26
NLRB vs. Indiana & Michigan Elec. Co., 318 U. S. 9 6, 8, 9, 10, 13, 16, 20, 30
NLRB vs. Laister-Kauffmann Aircraft Corp., 144 F. 2d 9, 16 13
NLRB vs. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Docks Co., 308 U. S. 241 24
NLRB vs. Henry K. Phelps, Jr., Trustee, 136 F. 2d 562, 566-7 20
NLRB vs. Sands Manufacturing Co., 306 U. S. 332, 341-2 21
NLRB vs. Swank Products Co., 108 F. 2d 872, 875 25
NLRB vs. Washington Dehydrated Food Co., 118 F. 2d 980, 997 20
NLRB vs. Weirton Steel Co., 135 F. 2d 494, 496 26
New Idea, Inc., vs. NLRB, 117 F. 2d 517, 524 28
Ranco, Inc., 57 NLRB No. 82 16
Reid, Murdoek & Co., 56 NLRB No. 57 18
United States vs. Johnson, decided February 4, 1946 (90 L. Ed. Adv. Ops. 389, 391) 7
Western Cartridge Co. vs. NLRB, 134 F. 2d 240, 245 24
Yale & Towne Mfg. Co., 56 NLRB No. 193 18

STATUTES

29 U. S. C. A., Secs. 159, 160(e)(f) 2
28 U. S. C. A., Sec. 240(a) 2
28 U. S. C. A., Sec. 346 22

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1945.

No. 786.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD,
PETITIONER,
VS.
DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, A CORPORATION;
DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION; AND INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT, DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, IN OPPOSITION.

OPINIONS BELOW.

The opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals (XIII, 7-64) are reported in 151 F. 2d 854. Prior opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals in this case are reported in 123 F. 2d 215.

JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the act of February 13, 1925, and Section 10(e) and (f) of the National Labor Relations Act.

THE FACTS AND ISSUES.

The Petitioner does not fairly state the facts or evidence.

The Petitioner does not correctly state the issues, but presents hypothetical questions.

Petitioner's Statement of Facts.

Petitioner by a distorted statement of the evidence attempts to make it appear that, on the facts, the decision below has grievously frustrated the Labor Board in carrying on its legitimate objectives (p. 32). The exact opposite is true—the Labor Board for seven years has sought to prevent the Donnelly employees from having the union of their own selection—a choice not merely by a majority but by 100% of the employees (see excerpt from Judge Riddick's opinion, XIII, 55), and has sought to punish respondent for having recognized and dealt with that union, as an employer is specifically required to do by the National Labor Relations Act (29 U. S. C. A., Sec. 159).

Petitioner's statement is extremely distorted in that throughout it assumes as proved by substantial evidence the very matters which are in controversy.

For example, at page 15, Petitioner says that "Todd called a meeting of employees during working hours on April 27, 1937" (the organization meeting of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union), whereas the Trial Examiner found in his first intermediate report that the meeting was held after working hours (A. 526), and the actual and offered testimony of the 1,200 employees was that it was held after working hours (III, 760; VIII, 2565, 2623, 2917, 3003, 3078, 3187 and 3253).

Practically every other statement in Petitioner's statement of facts is subject to the same criticism.

We are cognizant of the rule that the Board's findings, if supported by the evidence, are conclusive; but that rule is not applicable here where the Court below did not reach the merits (XIII, 37, 51). Implicit in the rule that the Board's findings are conclusive is the prerequisite rule that the Board shall have first given a proper hearing and have received and considered the competent and material evidence offered by the respondent—and whether the Board did that here was the issue before the Court below.

Petitioner's Statement of the Issues.

Petitioner's statement of the "Questions Presented" (p. 2) is even more unfair and incorrect. They present hypothetical issues, not the real issues. Petitioner assumes as facts the very matters which are in controversy and leaves out facts and evidence which were before the Court below and, on such premise asks, did the Court below err? Such issues are, therefore, hypothetical and for this Court to pass upon the issues as presented by Petitioner would not answer the question whether the Court below erred.

For illustration, we refer to Petitioner's Question 1(a) (at p. 2), which assumes that the employer "through his supervisory staff sets up and thereafter takes a leading part in the administration of a plant union." That statement assumes as a fact the principal controverted question in the case. The Court below did not pass on any question or matter involving that assumption.

Practically every other of the "Questions Presented" by the Petitioner contains the same vice.

THE REAL ISSUES.

The issue upon which the Court below based its refusal to enforce the Board's order was whether respondent was denied a fair trial by the Board's refusal to receive and consider certain evidence and by its refusal to designate a different trial examiner to conduct the second hearing. These matters are set forth in the Court's opinion at XIII, 38-51. The issue as to whether the Board's findings and order were supported by the evidence was not reached by the Court below (XIII, 37). The issue here on application for certiorari is not whether the Court below was wrong in some one or more of these rulings, but whether the decision of the Court below is so completely wrong, in all respects, as to constitute an abuse of the Court's power and discretion.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

Certiorari should not be granted for the following reasons:

I. The Court below, in refusing to enforce the Board's order, did not abuse the power and discretion vested in it by Congress.

(a) The Court was "not in error" in ruling that the Board should have received and considered the offered evidence.

(b) The Court was "not in error" in ruling that the Board should have designated a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing.

(c) In any event, the Court's rulings were not so completely wrong as to constitute an abuse of the Court's judicial power and discretion.

II. The decision of the Court below does not involve questions of such importance or character as to call for the issuance of certiorari by this Court.

III. The decision below does not conflict with decisions of this Court or with decisions of other circuits.

ARGUMENT.

I.

The court below did not abuse its power and discretion in refusing enforcement of the Board's order.

In National Labor Relations Board v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9, this court said (at p. 28):

> "But courts which are required upon a limited review to lend their enforcement powers to the Board's orders are granted some discretion to see that the hearings out of which the conclusive findings emanate do not shut off a party's right to produce evidence or conduct cross examination material to the issue. * * * Findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support, its findings, is heard and weighed."

and at p. 16:

> "Thus, in order to decide this case in favor of the Board we would have to hold not merely that the evidence of dynamiting would be a matter of indifference in our view of the case but that the court designated by statute to exercise discretion in the matter and which desired to know the facts about it before passing on the sufficiency of the evidence and the impartiality of the examiner and which thought the finder of the facts should hear and consider such evidence, must not only have been in error but must also have abused its judicial discretion."

The foregoing ruling is applicable here. Although that ruling was made upon an application to adduce additional evidence yet the same reasoning is applicable in a proceeding to enforce an order of the Board. The Circuit Court of Appeals is the court vested by Congress with the power of determining whether the Board's orders shall be enforced. Of course, that is not an uncontrolled power, but certainly it carries a wide latitude and range of discretion and judgment to be exercised by the court, especially as to evidentiary matters and procedural questions, which are the type of matters ruled on in this proceeding.

This Court should no more review the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals in its decision upon these fact questions than the Circuit Court of Appeals should review the decision of a trial court upon similar fact questions—as held by this Court in the recent case of United States v. Johnson, decided February 4, 1946, where the Court said (90 L. Ed. Advance Opinions 389, l. c. 391):

> "But it is not the province of this Court or the Circuit Court of Appeals to review orders granting or denying motions for a new trial when such review is sought on the alleged ground that the trial court made erroneous findings of fact" (Citing cases).
>
> "While the appellate court might intervene when the findings of fact are wholly unsupported by evidence" (Citing cases), "it should never do so where it does not clearly appear that the findings are not supported by any evidence."

Under the above quoted cases, certiorari should not be granted herein unless the Court below "not only is in error" but also unless the bases of its decision are so utterly groundless that it has "abused its judicial power and discretion."

Neither of such conditions exists here:

(a)

THE COURT BELOW WAS "NOT IN ERROR" IN RULING THAT THE BOARD SHOULD HAVE RECEIVED AND CONSIDERED THE PROFFERED EVIDENCE.

The Court below bases its decision as to the exclusion of evidence on the Board's refusal to receive and consider evidence as to six different matters (XIII, 40-50).

This Court's ruling in the Indiana and Michigan case, supra (l. c. 16), would apply if only one material class or item of evidence had been excluded by the Board. We submit that the Court below was right as to all six classes. Each of these types of evidence was directly relevant and material to some phase of the case as to which Board made findings adverse to respondent. We briefly discuss the various types of evidence excluded:

(1) Evidence of conspiracy by ILGWU.

In NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Co., Supra, this Court in passing upon the materiality of evidence of violence and lawlessness engaged in by the petitioning union held (headnote 1) that—

> "the dynamiting and other acts of violence might have explained the preference expressed by some employees for the latter union, which preference had been wholly disbelieved by the Board, and, on the whole case, it would seem that the Board ought to have considered the dynamiting, along with the other evidence, before reaching any final conclusion in the case."

And the Court also held (l. c. 20) that such evidence would go to the

> "fairness of giving absolute finality to the Board's findings of fact" and also (l. c. 24) would bear on the employees' "good faith in testifying to the reasons for preferring an association of their own to Local B-9."

The excluded evidence here, with reference to the conspiracy, unlawful activities, and threats of the complaining union, ILGWU against the Donnelly company and its employees, comes within the same category as that ruled upon by this Court in the Indiana and Michigan case, supra. The excluded evidence here would have shown that the ILGWU was threatening to subject the Donnelly employees to physical violence and to the humiliation of having their clothing stripped from them in the public streets, as the ILGWU had been doing in its other strikes (A. 488-491; IV, 1216, 1228, 1273, 1275, 1302, 1305; V, 1412, et seq., 1477, 1483, 1511, 1527, 1546; XII, 4195) as well as endangering their jobs and right to go to and from their work in peace and security. These were vital rights—rights which respondent's employees might be expected to protect and preserve to themselves by every lawful means, without any "coercion" by respondent. This evidence, therefore, had a direct bearing on the principal issue here, of "domination."

The Board refused to receive such testimony or to let respondent go into any of the matters relating to such conspiracy (A. 509) which were pleaded as a defense in Part B of respondent's answer (A. 387-394), but struck that part of respondent's answer (A. 508) and rejected respondent's offer of proof (III, 742d; VIII. 2562) on Part B of its answer.

Such evidence was also competent and material because it would throw light on many controverted issues as to which the Board made adverse findings, and also would bear on the good faith, truthworthiness and reasonableness of the testimony of respondent's employees as to how and why they formed the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, as well as upon that of respondent's officials. (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 24).

The Court below "was not in error" in holding that such evidence should have been received and considered by the Board.

(2) Refusal of Board to consider employees' testimony as directed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in its former decision.

The Court in its previous opinion (123 F. 2d 215) held that the testimony and offered testimony of the "1,200 employees" of respondent as to "how and why" they came to form and join the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union and that they did so freely and without any domination, coercion or interference by the employer, was competent and material testimony and should have been received and considered by the Board. We do not argue that all 1,200 witnesses should have been permitted to take the stand; but that the testimony of those who did testify as to such matters should have been accepted by the Board as being material to the issues and should have been fairly weighed and considered by the Board as material, in accordance with the previous opinion of the Court below, and that the offered testimony of the remaining 1,200 employees having been rejected as cumulative, should have been considered as though the "1,200 witnesses" had actually testified thereto (as Judge Riddick held XIII, 53). But the Trial Examiner and the Board refused to regard this evidence as having any materiality whatsoever. The Trial Examiner repeatedly said in the first trial that it was wholly worthless and he would not consider it (A, 484-487, 492-3). In the second hearing, although he permitted eleven employee witnesses to testify and it was conceded that the remaining 1,200 employees would testify substantially the same way, this overwhelming proof did not move him one jot or tittle and he blandly finds in his second Intermediate Report, as in his first, that the employees were "coerced" by the employer into forming the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, thereby necessarily holding that each and all of these 1,200 witnesses either committed perjury or that they were practically morons, who did not know when duress was being applied to them.

That the Trial Examiner completely disregarded and refused to consider the employees' testimony is conclusively shown by the fact that in his Intermediate Report the only mention made by him of this testimony—obviously the most important evidence in the case—is at X, 3838, where he says "the undersigned accorded the respondent and the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected at the prior hearing * * *," and then after devoting 40 printed pages to the recitation of other evidence, mostly circumstantial, and without once mentioning that the 1,200 employees say there was no coercion, the Trial Examiner at X, 3888, says: "On all the evidence the undersigned finds the respondent dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union * * *"! A more flagrant disregard of important evidence and flaunting of the Court's ruling can hardly be conceived, unless it be that of the Board itself to which we now turn.

The Board was more blunt in stating its disregard for the evidence which the Court had ruled was material. The Board adopts the Trial Examiner's intermediate report word for word (A, 618) save for a minor correction (A, 620) and bluntly says that it "adheres to its opinion," that the employees' testimony has no materiality upon the issue of domination— "* * * we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the Act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case" (A, 619).

The Board lamely attempts to side step its open avowal that it deems said evidence immaterial by saying that it "carefully considered all such evidence" (A, 619). It seems, obvious, however, that no bona fide consideration was given by the Board to evidence which it avowedly treated as immaterial. The respondent gained nothing by the Court's remand of the case to the Board to "receive and consider" (XIII, 5) the excluded evidence. It was the same as though the Board had again refused to receive it at all. The Board's refusal to accept the spirit of the Court's decision made the remand a mere farce. As said in De Bardeleben v. National Labor Relations Board, (C. C. A. 5) 135 F. 2d 13, l. c. 14-15:

> "The finding of the board that the acts of the employees in forming their own association were not their voluntary acts but were the results of domination, interference and support by the company, in the face of the positive evidence of those who formed the organization that this was not so, and with no evidence to the contrary, is a mere fiat."

And in Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, (C. C. A. 5) 113 F. 2d 85, l. c. 91:

> "If human testimony can establish anything, it establishes that Humble did not dominate or interfere with the organization of either Federation."

Nor was this "conclusionary" evidence, as it is referred to by the Board. It is testimony as to facts. The witnesses were asked, not only, "did you join the DGWU of your own free will," but were asked questions such as these: "Did any officer, executive or anyone that you thought was representing the management talk to you about the meeting?" (of April 27th) (VIII, 2565): "Now, prior to that meeting; had anyone, any officer, executive, or anyone representing the management, suggested to you or suggested to anybody else in your presence that the employees form a union?" (VIII, 2566); "Did any official, executive, or representative of the management request you to sign the petition?" (of March 2nd) (p. 2578); "Did you gain the impression from any source, or did you understand that the Loyalty League had anything to do with the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union?" (p. 2582); "Did you ever hear anybody in the factory say that Ross Todd represents the employers about labor matters?" (p. 2593) etc., etc. The answers to all these questions were in the negative. Those and many other similar answers constituted testimony as to facts, not conclusions.

But we also submit that the answers that the employees "joined the DGWU of their own free will and without coercion on the part of the petitioner" is testimony as to a fact—i. e. the state of mind of the witnesses —and as to the fact that such state of mind was not created by duress of petitioner. And who would know that fact better than the employees concerned?

Respondent respectfully submits that the Board's refusal to treat as material the unanimous testimony of the employees concerned that they formed and joined the DGWU as their voluntary choice of a bargaining agency, was not only a flagrant abuse of its own power (Consolidated Edison Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 197, l. c. 226; Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 28; NLRB v. Laister-Kauffmann Aircraft Corp., (C. C. A. 8) 144 F. 2d 9, l. c. 16), but was also a flagrant disregard of the Court's ruling.

The Court was "not in error" in its ruling on this matter.

(3) Failure to receive evidence as to events in 1934-35.

The Board over respondent's objections (III, 1110 a, b, c,) received in evidence hundreds of pages of testimony given in an invalid Labor Board proceeding back in 1934-35 (prior to the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act). Respondent contends, and the Court below ruled (XIII, 48), that having admitted the Board's and ILGWU's evidence as to the 1934-35 activities, the Board should not have excluded respondent's countervailing evidence and cross examination relating to the same period and events (VIII, 2823-25, 2887-8, 2896; X, 3757; A, 278, 281, 285, 287). The Board based its finding (erroneous, we claim) of respondent's "hostility to unions" on such evidence (X, 3869, 3871, 3885-6). The relevance and materiality of such countervailing evidence and cross examination as to these matters, and the unfairness of excluding it seems too obvious to require further discussion. The Court below was "not in error" in ruling that it should have been received and considered.

(4) Failure to receive evidence of provisions of ILGWU contracts.

The issue here is not the general, abstract question of whether in a unfair labor practice proceeding the contracts of the complaining union with other employers are admissible, as petitioner seems to present it. The relevance of the evidence is based upon the fact that the Board and ILGWU devoted much time and evidence in an effort to show that the contracts between respondent and the DGWU were "sham" contracts (I, 160d, 160g, 161-2, 205-6), in support of their contention that the DGWU was dominated by respondent. They pointed to the provision in the DGWU contract that members of the bargaining committee must have been employed for a year by the respondent (I, 160d, 160g), as showing company domination. To rebut this and show that the provision was a proper and usual one in union contracts and hence no proof of domination, respondent offered to prove that the ILGWU contracts contained similar provisions (VI, 1656, 1661-2, 1669). Such evidence was clearly competent for that purpose and its materiality is shown by the Board's adverse findings based on the very contention which this rejected testimony would have refuted (X, 3879). The Court was "not in error" in ruling such contracts admissible for the purposes offered.

(5) Refusal to receive evidence that Instructors, Thread Girls and other employees of respondent, held by the Board to be Supervisory Employees, were not so considered in trade unions generally, including the ILGWU itself, but were eligible to union membership.

One of the chief bases of the Board's decision against respondent is that the employees known as Instructors, Thread Girls, Head Pattern Maker (Mrs. Strickland) Head Cutter (Mr. Scoles), Examiners, and certain other employees, participated in the formation of the DGWU and were members of it and that their participation therein rendered that Union a dominated union, on the ground that such employees were "representatives of the management" (X, 3875-3878). To refute this finding or inference by the Board, the respondent sought to show by Wave Tobin, local manager of the ILGWU (X, 3788) and by the records of the ILGWU (X, 3790) and by Erwin Feldman, Counsel for many garment companies (X, 3791-2), that such employees and employees holding similar positions in garment companies, were regarded in trade unions generally, including the ILGWU, as not being Supervisory Employees but as being eligible to membership and participation in such unions. The relevance of this evidence for such purpose is apparent. In International Assoc. of Machinists v. National Labor Relations Board, 311 U. S. 72 (l. c. 80), this Court held that the test as to domination by alleged Supervisory employees was whether the employees generally "would have just cause to believe" that such alleged supervisory employees "were acting for and on behalf of the management." If employees in the garment industry generally do not regard such employees as supervisory employees and do regard them as eligible to join and participate in unions, those facts would have a bearing on the true status of such employees in the case at bar. It would also throw light on the credibility and effect to be given to the testimony of the employees and of respondent's officers as to the status of such alleged supervisory employees (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 24-27).

In fact, the Board itself has used this very type of evidence for this very purpose: In Reid, Murdock & Company, 56 NLRB No. 57, The Board said: "The Union has included keymen of similar work status in its bargaining contracts with the company's competitors." (And the Board in that case found such "keymen" not supervisors but "ordinary production and maintenance employees.")

Under the Board's own decisions in other cases, the instructors, thread girls, Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton, head pattern maker, Mrs. Strickland, Mrs. Gray, the inspectors, and similar employees, were not supervisory employees but were eligible to membership in the DGWU and their membership and participation therein does not constitute domination, coercion or interference by the management:

Ranco, Inc., 57 NLRB No. 82, decided July 20, 1944, was an unfair labor practice case, similar to the case at bar. The question was whether "group leaders" and "set up men" were supervisory employees. The "group leaders" were very much like the instructors in the case at bar—they instructed employees, gave them work, etc. The Board said:

> "The basic question to be determined in order to resolve the issues concerning interference, restraint, and coercion on the part of the respondent and domination of the independent by the respondent is the alleged supervisory status of two classes of employees, namely, group leaders and set-up men. * * *
>
> "Group leaders give work to employees in the production or inspection line, instruct employees in their duties, ascertain whether they are supplied with work, obtain supplies and equipment for employees, and at times engage in production work alongside ordinary employees.
>
> "The record clearly establishes that neither group leaders nor set-up men have power to hire, demote, or discharge employees, to grant raises or leaves of absence, or to recommend such action. Their authority in this regard is limited to reporting to their superiors, either foremen or assistant foremen, the inefficiency of employees within their groups. * * * Although some employees testified that they regard set-up men and group leaders as their 'bosses,' the evidence establishes, in our opinion, that group leaders and set-up men perform no supervisory functions, being merely highly skilled employees, and are not regarded as supervisors by the management, by the other employees, or by themselves. Set-up men and group leaders were eligible to membership in both the Independent and the Union; several joined either one or the other organization. At the hearing, Lewis Strickland, the Union's International Representative, admitted that group leaders and job-setters were members of the Union and stated that their continued eligibility to membership was 'a matter for me to determine later on.' In view of all the evidence, we find that group leaders and set-up men were not supervisory employees. * * * We conclude that the respondent is not liable for their activities and statements."

In Industrial Rayon Corporation, 56 NLRB No. 104, decided May 15, 1944, the Board held that section inspectors and the head inspector in the cone packing department were not supervisory employees, saying:

> "While they are responsible for the quality of the work produced, they do not supervise production employees in the sense that they have the power to hire, discharge, lay-off, discipline or otherwise effect changes in their status. Rejection by them of the work of the production employees does not have any direct or significant effect upon the earnings of these employees; they have no voice in determining or shaping the labor policy of the company. It is clear, therefore, that in the area of labor relations and policy, these employees do not constitute management in the eyes of the rank and file as do truly supervisory employees."

(And to the same effect, see: Dortch Stove Works, Inc., 58 NLRB No. 82; Reid, Murdock & Co., 56 NLRB No. 57; Yale & Towne Mfg. Co., 56 NLRB No. 193; Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., 53 NLRB No. 170.)

Although respondent contends that the "Instructors," "Thread Girls," etc., were in no sense supervisory employees and hence properly participated in the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union under the Board's former decisions, now the Board has gone further and held (in the United Mine Workers' case, announced in the press on March 7th, 1946) that it is proper for foremen (admittedly "Supervisory" employees) to be included in Unions with production "workers."

The Court below was "not in error" in ruling that such offered evidence should have been received.

(6) Refusal to permit respondent to examine Wave Tobin as to threats and violence of ILGWU, and concerning eligibility of "instructors," etc., to participate in unions, and generally.

The Trial Examiner refused to let respondent examine Wave Tobin at all (VIII, 2561-2-3; IX, 3257). After first letting her testify for a short while, he stopped her testimony (VIII, 2543), ruling that he would first hear the 1,200 employees (VIII, 2556, 2561). But later he refused to let her be recalled to the stand to testify as to anything (X, 3257, X 3783), rejecting respondent's offers of proof 1-SSSSS and 1-TTTTT (X, 3787-3790), and struck out entirely the little testimony which she had given (IX, 3257). The Board's refusal to permit respondent to call and examine Wave Tobin therefore became not merely a ruling on the "order of proof," but the total exclusion of Wave Tobin as a witness, and hence was arbitrary, unfair, and contrary to all concepts of a fair trial. The Court was "not in error" in ruling that such testimony should have been received.

We respectfully submit that as to each and all of the six items or types of evidence excluded, the Court below was "not in error" in ruling that it should have been received by the Board, and further submit that if the Court was right as to any one of the six items, this Court should not disturb the decision by writ of certiorari.

(b)

THE COURT WAS NOT IN ERROR IN RULING THAT THE BOARD SHOULD HAVE DESIGNATED A DIFFERENT TRIAL EXAMINER FOR THE SECOND HEARING.

Respondent in its Application for Designation of Another Trial Examiner for the second hearing made a very strong showing that Trial Examiner Batten had prejudged respondent's most important evidence (A, 475, 483, 493). Batten's mind was completely saturated with the view that the testimony of the 1,200 employees concerned, as to "how and why" they formed and joined the DCWU and that they did so freely and voluntarily, without coercion, was completely worthless and immaterial. It was, therefore, impossible for him to fairly evaluate that testimony, as respondent was entitled to have it evaluated.

The Court below is entitled to some latitude and discretion in determining whether it shall enforce an order of the Board upon a hearing so conducted (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 28). It was not merely a question of Batten's erroneous rulings in the first hearing, which could be reviewed on appeal; it was a question of "preventing his future action in the pending cause" (Ex Parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35, l. c. 44) when he had pre-judged the case. Here the circumstances amply justify the Court's ruling that the Board should have appointed a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing (NLRB v. Washington Dehydrated Food Co., (9 C. C. A.) 118 F. 2d 980, l. c. 997; NLRB v. Henry K. Phelps, Jr., Trustee, (5 C. C. A.) 136 F. 2d 562, l. c. 566-7).

(c)

IN ANY EVENT, THE COURT'S RULINGS WERE NOT SO COMPLETELY WRONG AS TO CONSTITUTE AN ABUSE OF ITS JUDICIAL POWER AND DISCRETION.

As said in the Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 16, the Court below must "not only have been in error" but must also "have abused its judicial discretion," to warrant this court in reviewing its decision.

Congress in setting up the procedure under the National Labor Relations Act vested in the Circuit Court of Appeals the power and discretion of determining (under certain limitations) whether the Board's order should be enforced. It was not contemplated by Congress that every decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals should be reviewed by this court. Congress was familiar with the policy of this court that it would not ordinarily review on certiorari decisions of the Circuit Court of Appeals except those falling within the scope of Rule 38 of this Court, and, with that knowledge, Congress made no further provision for review by this court of Labor Board cases. A wide latitude of discretion must be allowed to the Circuit Court of Appeals in passing upon such matters. For example in NLRB v. Sands Mfg. Co., 306 U. S. 332, l. c. 341-2, this Court held that certain statements by certain alleged supervisory employees did not, under the circumstances, constitute evidence of the employer's policy and in the International Machinists case, supra (l. c. 80), this court laid down the rule that whether the statements of an alleged supervisory employee constitute domination depends not so much on the nature of the employee's position but on whether the employees generally have "just cause to believe" that he is speaking for the management. Under these rulings, there is a wide range within which the Circuit Court's discretion and determination as to the relevance and materiality of evidence excluded by the Board should be given finality in enforcement cases and not be reviewed by this court on certiorari.

The case at bar comes especially within that range for the court below has in good faith exercised its power and discretion upon six different types of evidence and in so doing it has not abused its discretion, "even though in this court's view such evidence would be a matter of indifference" (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 16).

II.

The decision of the court below does not involve questions of such importance or character as to call for the issuance of certiorari by this court.

Our comments (pp. 20-21, supra) are also applicable here.

This case is peculiarly one in which this court should not disturb the decision of the court below. The grounds upon which the court below based its decision are procedural matters and questions of evidence. This court has in many decisions established the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence and a reiteration of those rules in a review of this case would serve no useful purpose. No two cases are exactly alike on the facts and no absolute criteria can be established to govern future rulings by inferior courts on such question. The Circuit Court of Appeals must be given a wide latitude in the exercise of their power and discretion in such matters. We respectfully submit that the case does not fall within any of the categories embraced in Rule 38 of this court.

It is true that the court below stated in its opinion (XIII, 51) that it believed the Labor Board would be justified in applying for certiorari. However, the court below did not deem the questions of sufficient importance or have such doubt concerning how they should be answered as to cause that court to certify the questions to this court for answer, as it was entitled to do under the statute (28 U. S. C. A., Sec. 346). True, as stated by the court below, the decision is an important one to the parties, namely, the Board, the Respondent, the Respondent's Employees, and the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union—but what case is not? It is important to the public only in the sense that all questions which involve the ruling of a public body, such as the Labor important. But under Rule 38 this court does not ordinarily consider importance of that nature a sufficient ground to disturb decisions of Circuit Courts of Appeal, unless the guidance of this court is needed for future decisions.

We respectfully submit that certiorari should be denied for lack of general judicial importance of the rulings below.

III.

The decision below does not conflict with decisions of this court or with decisions of other circuits.

Petitioner says (p. 34) that the decision below (as to the materiality of the "employee testimony") conflicts with Bethlehem Steel Co. v. NLRB, 120 F. 2d 641. In the Bethlehem case there was a prior company-dominated Plan—and the court said (l. c. 653):

> "Since the organization, structure, and Company support of the Plans ensure Company dominance and violate the Act, this testimony would have been irrelevant."

The court's holding of immateriality is based on the fact of the company's domination of the prior union. But that is not the situation here. Here there was no prior union, and hence there is no conflict with the Bethlehem Steel Co. case.

In the prior decision herein of the Court below that court said (123 F. 2d l. c. 222):

> "This was not a case where domination and support by an employer of an independent union was conceded or where the independent union was conclusively shown to be of a character which could not, in any event, act as the bargaining representative of its members. The evidence of the Board which tended to show domination and support of the independent union by the Company was circumstantial."

Nor does the decision below conflict with Western Cartridge Co. v. NLRB, 134 F. 2d 240. In quoting from that case, pp. 36-37, petitioner stopped short of the paragraph immediately following the part quoted, which reads (l. c. 244):

> "In the instant case, the record discloses that the examiner permitted Independent to adduce the testimony of witnesses who had participated in its organization as to their reasons for joining, but that he refused to receive the testimony of several thousand employees as to their reasons for joining the Independent after its formation."

Here the Trial Examiner and Board refused to consider as material the testimony of the employees who participated in organizing the independent union. That clearly differentiates the two cases.

The other cases alleged (pp. 37-38) to be in conflict with the decision below are distinguishable in that they each involve a prior company dominated union or plan and that the new union or plan was merely a continuation under a new name, and hence was invalid under the holding of this Court in NLRB v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 308 U. S. 241. Such holdings are therefore not in conflict with the decision at bar where there was no prior union.*

---

*The Board, realizing this obvious distinction and seeking to overcome that obstacle so as to bring the case within the ruling of the Newport News case, attempted to fashion a "prior union" out of a social organization existing among the Donnelly employees known as the Loyalty League, which organization however never approached the status of a labor union in any way. It never dealt with the Company as to wages and working conditions, it had no dues, held no regular meetings and, according to the testimony and offered testimony of the 1,200 employees, was not connected with the Donnelly Petitioner concedes (p. 38) that NLRB v. Swank Products, Inc., (C. C. A. 3) 108 F. 2d 872, 875, is in harmony with the decision below. So is that of the 5th circuit in Humble Oil & Ref. Co. v. NLRB (113 F. 2d 85 l. c. 91). And see also the eight cases cited by the court below in its former opinion, 123 F. 2d, beginning at the bottom of page 222.

The cases cited by petitioner at p. 39 as being in conflict with the decision below that the Board should have designated a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing are not in conflict but are distinguishable.

In NLRB v. Air Associates, Inc., 121 F. 2d 586, the court (quoting from NLRB v. Ford Motor Co., 114 F. 2d 905, 909), concedes that: "each decision must be based upon the peculiar facts of the case involved and the cause and degree of the impropriety" (l. c. 589), and pointed out that even if the Examiner were biased it would not upset the Board's order "since respondent does not assert that the Examiner committed any error in the admission or exclusion of evidence" (l. c. 589). (How different from the case at bar, where not only does the respondent assert, but the court below finds, that the Trial Examiner committed error in excluding six different classifications of material

---

Garment Workers' Union in any way but its activities were purely social (III, 762; I, 37, 187; II, 643, 561, 622, 652, 676, 678-9; VIII, 2581-2, 2632, 2718, 2727, 2777-8, 2860, 2827-8; IX, 3011, 3052, 3090, 3129-30, 3196). In fact, the Board's own witness, Etta Dorsey, a very hostile witness, let the truth as to the true status of the Loyalty League escape her when she testified (IX, 3362-3):

"Q. As a matter of fact, that was all the Loyalty League was, a social group?

A. Yes, a kind of get together and get acquainted affair, and plan on good times and things like that.

Q. Yes, you had parties and picnics.

A. Yes, that was the object of it."

And the Board's witness, Mrs. Keyes, testified similarly (X, 3653):

"Q. [illegible] activities in the Loyalty League other than and competent evidence!) Also the court in the Air Associates case says: "But here the trial examiner made no decision and his tentative findings were disregarded" (l. c. 590). (How, different, here, where the entire Intermediate Report of the Trial Examiner was adopted verbatim by the Board, except for a minor correction stated by the Board at A, 620.)

In NLRB v. Weirton Steel Co., 135 F. 2d 494, the court pointed out that "the trial examiner against whom most of the accusations of unfairness are made was superseded long before the end of the hearings and made no intermediate report," and that "When the second trial examiner took charge of the hearings, he afforded the Company a full opportunity to offer any evidence which it had previously been prevented from introducing" (l. c. 496). This fact situation is so different that there is no conflict with the case at bar.

In NLRB v. Botany Worsted Mills, 133 F. 2d 876, it likewise appears that there is no similarity between that case and the one here. The statements of the Trial Examiner most complained of was that he "was bound by prior rulings of the Board upon the very case in hand" (l. c. 882). The court also said, concerning the Trial Examiner's ruling on evidence, etc.: "In the view we take of the case, there was no error in these rulings" (l. c. 882). (How different from the situation here where the court below holds that the Trial Examiner and Board erred in many different respects!)

Nor does Ex Parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35, aid petitioner. On the contrary in that case this court said of the rule for disqualifying judges that:

> "It was never intended to enable a discontented litigant to oust a judge because of adverse rulings made, for such rulings are reviewable otherwise, but to prevent his future action in the pending cause". (l. c. 44).

That is precisely what respondent sought here in asking for a different Trial Examiner—"to prevent his (Batten's) future action in the pending cause"—after he had prejudged respondent's most important evidence as worthless and immaterial and had expressed such pre-judgment in terms so positive and unequivocal (A, 484, 486, 492) as to show beyond question that he could not in the second hearing fairly evaluate such testimony or accord to it any weight whatever.

There is obviously no conflict between the case at bar and the American Steel Barrel case but, rather, the latter case supports the holding of the Court below.

Likewise the case of Berger v. United States, 255 U. S. 22, is not in conflict with the case at bar. That case is one of the leading cases holding that it is essential to judicial administration that a litigant have a fair trial before an unbiased judge. It holds that a showing which gives "fair support" to the charges of a "bent of mind" that "may" impede impartial judgment, is sufficient. The decision below is in harmony, not in conflict, with that view.

Petitioner (p. 39) misconceives the importance of the Trial Examiner in the procedure set up by the NLR Act. While the Trial Examiner does not make decisions, his findings and recommendations in his Intermediate Report carry great weight with the Board, as do the findings of a Master, or of a lower court with appellate courts. If the Trial Examiner is biased or has pre-judged a case, it is well nigh impossible to prevent such bias or pre-judgment from being carried forward into the Board's decision. The instant case is an excellent example, as the Board here accepted the Trial Examiner's report in toto.

In Paragraph 2 (p. 40), Petitioner again cites Bethlehem Steel Co. v. NLRB, 120 F. 2d 641, as being in conflict with the decision below on the admissibility of certain provisions in ILGWU contracts. As pointed out, supra, the issue is not whether those contracts were admissible generally, but to rebut the Board's and ILGWU's evidence and contentions. In the Bethlehem Steel Co. case the purpose was to make a general showing "regarding the dates, scope, duration and terms of the agreements * * *" (l. c. 651). The Court held the contracts were irrelevant for such purpose. That holding does not conflict with the holding here.

Under Paragraph 3 (p. 41), the Board cites two cases as being in conflict with the decision below on the question as to whether evidence was admissible tending to show that employees of the same or similar status as the Instructors, Thread Girls, Examiners, etc., were generally regarded in the garment industry and unions, including the ILGWU, as not being supervisory employees and as being eligible to union membership. Here again, the contentions of the Board in the hearings must be considered in determining the relevance and materiality of the proffered evidence. We have discussed this at pp. 15-19, supra.

With this background it is apparent that the case of NLRB v. Aintree Corp., 132 F. 2d 469, is not in conflict with the decision below.

Nor does New Idea, Inc., v. NLRB, 117 F. 2d 517, conflict with the decision below. In fact, apparently, the Board there admitted the very kind of evidence that the Board here excluded (l. c. 524). The question of the admissibility of such evidence was not involved.

At p. 42, the Board veers from its argument as to conflict of cases, to argue that even if relevant and material, the Board was justified in rejecting such evidence because it was not covered by the remand. This argument is fallacious for at least four reasons:

1. The Board by its evidence at the second hearing bearing on the supervisory status of Instructors and Thread Girls (IX, 3324-5, 3434-5-6-7; X, 3481-2, 3554, 3642, 3644, 3650-1-2, 3673, 3675,) made admissible this rebuttal evidence, whether covered by the remand or not.

2. The Trial Examiner permitted the Board great latitude in putting in additional testimony in the second hearing to bolster its case in chief (over respondent's strenuous objections, IX, 3276-3288, incl., 3292-3309, incl.; 3330-3332, incl.; 3471-2; 3486; X, 3552, 3640-1, 3666) and it little behooves the Board to complain that the respondent in rebuttal thereof sought also to add to its defense in chief.

3. It was fairly within the terms of the remand which was for the purpose of receiving and considering "all of the competent and material evidence" (123 F. 2d l. c. 225) which the Board had rejected at the first hearing, including "how and why the employees came to organize" the DGWU (l. c. 222). Also the Board at the first hearing had rejected the ILGWU contracts which respondent had offered in evidence, and the Board had striken out in its entirety Part B of respondent's answer, relating to the conspiracy of violence and fraud on the part of the ILGWU. If all this evidence had not been rejected at the first hearing, the respondent would in connection therewith have adduced evidence on the points in question.

Lastly, and in any event, the Court's ruling as to this one item of evidence, even if erroneous, is not such an abuse of its discretion and power as to invalidate its decision on the other five types of evidence which it held the Board should have received and considered.

Under Paragraph 4 (pp. 43-44), petitioner argues the correctness of the Trial Examiner's ruling that respondent could not adduce evidence of matters occurring more than six months prior to the first hearing, while permitting the Board to go into such matters. It appears to us that the mere statement of this matter shows the unfairness of such a ruling, and respondent protested vigorously against it, to the Trial Examiner, at the time (VIII, 2309, 2823-25, 2887-8; Assignments of Error Nos. 243, 244, 248, 249; A, 278-280, 285-87; X, 3757), but without avail. The question therefore is not whether such evidence was offered in the first hearing but whether in the second hearing the Board should be permitted to bolster its case in chief and at the same time respondent should be denied the opportunity to refute such additional testimony.

Under Paragraph 5, pp. 44-49, petittioner argues that the Court below erred in its ruling as to the admissibility of evidence concerning the ILGWU conspiracy. We have presented this under Point I, supra.

Petitioner obviously labors in its efforts to show that the court below misinterpreted or misapplied the ruling of this court in the Indiana and Michigan case, supra, but it is clear from the opinion that the Court below had none of the misconceptions which petitioner attributes to it.

If respondent had been permitted to show the matters alleged in Part B of its answer (stricken by the Board A, 508), it would clearly have shown a situation within this Court's language in the Indiana and Michigan case, that—

"* * * if it should appear that the charge is so related to a course of violence and destruction, carried on for the *purpose of coercing an employer to help herd its employees into the complaining union * * ". (1. c. 19).

That was exactly what the ILGWU was seeking to do here (See Part "B" of respondent's answer, A. 387-8).

CONCLUSION.

In Ford Motor Co. v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 364, 373, this court held that the Circuit Court of Appeals "may adjust its relief to the exigencies of the case in accordance with the equitable principles governing judicial action * * * to secure a just result with a minimum of technical requirements."

The decision below is in accord therewith.

Certiorari is ordinarily only granted when necessary to do substantial justice. To grant it here would do injustice both to respondent and to its employees who have unanimously freely chosen and maintained the DGWU as their bargaining agency for seven (now nearly nine) years. Respondent respectfully submits that this honorable court should now terminate this unjustifiable litigation, by denying certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT J. INGRAHAM,
BURR S. STOTTLE,
Attorneys for Respondent, Donnelly Garment Company.

REED, INGRAHAM & MILLIGAN,
Of Counsel.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
MAR 26 1946
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1945.

No. 786. 38

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, and INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

No. [redacted] 39

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

BRIEF OF DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION IN OPPOSITION TO CERTIORARI.

FRANK E. TYLER,
Counsel for Donnelly Garment Workers' Union.

COSSETT, ELLIS, DIETRICH & TYLER,
Of Counsel.

SMITH-GREEN CO., LAW PRINTERS, KANSAS CITY, MO.

INDEX.

	PAGE
Opinions below	1
Jurisdiction	2
Questions presented	2
Statutes involved	4
Statement	5
Summary of argument	11
Argument	13
Conclusion	31
Appendix	32

Table of Cases.

American Enka Corp. v. NLRB, 119 F. (2d) 60	17, 19
American Steel Barrel Co., Ex parte, 230 U. S. 35, 57 L. Ed. 1379	20
Berger v. U. S., 255 U. S. 22, 65 L. Ed. 481	21, 27
Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. NLRB, 114 F. (2d) 930	17, 19
Bethlehem Steel Co. v. NLRB, 120 F. (2d) 641	17, 22
Cupples v. NLRB, 106 F. (2d) 100	30
Donnelly Garment Company v. NLRB, 123 F. (2d) 215	30
Federal Comm. Comm. v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134, 60 Sup. Ct. 437, 84 L. Ed. 656	25
Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 Sup. Ct. 443, 84 L. Ed. 664	25
L. Grief & Bro. v. NLRB, 108 F. (2d) 551	30
Hamilton Brown Shoe Co. v. Wolf Bros., 240 U. S. 251, 60 L. Ed. 629	23
International Association of Machinists v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 72, 85 L. Ed. 50	22

PAGE

Morgan v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 82 L. Ed. 1129 24

NLRB v. A. S. Abell, 97 F. (2d) 951 30
NLRB v. Aintree Corp., 132 F. (2d) 469 22
NLRB v. Air Associates, 121 F. (2d) 586 20
NLRB v. Automotive Maint. Mach. Co., 315 U. S. 282, 86 L. Ed. 848, Rev. 116 F. (2d) 350 19
NLRB v. Botany Worsted Mills, 133 F. (2d) 876 20
NLRB v. Bradford Dyeing, 310 U. S. 318, 60 Sup. Ct. 918, 84 L. Ed. 1226 25
NLRB v. Brown Paper Mill Co., 108 F. (2d) 867 19
NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Company, 318 U. S. 9, 87 L. Ed. 579 ..... 13, 30
NLRB v. Mathieson, 114 F. (2d) 796 30
NLRB v. New Era Dye Co., 118 F. (2d) 500 19
NLRB v. Newport News Shipbuilding Co., 308 U. S. 241, 84 L. Ed. 219 ..... 17, 19
NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding, 135 F. (2d) 15 30
NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, 99 F. (2d) 153 30
NLRB v. Weirton Steel Co., 135 F. (2d) 494 20
New Idea, Inc., v. NLRB, 117 F. (2d) 517 22

O'Malley v. United States, 128 F. (2d) 676 27

Panama R. R. Co. v. Napier Shipping Co., 166 U. S. 280, 41 L. Ed. 1004 23

Quaker State Oil v. NLRB, 119 F. (2d) 631 30

Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Co., 124 F. (2d) 440 26
Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. 467, 15 L. Ed. 969 24
Ryan v. United States, 99 F. (2d) 864 26

Simmons Co. v. Grier Bros. Co., 258 U. S. 82, 66 L. Ed. 475 23
Sorenson v. Pyrate Co., 65 F. (2d) 982 ..... 24, 27

U. S. v. Morgan, 313 U. S. 409, 85 L. Ed. 1429 21
U. S. Trust Co. v. N. M., 183 U. S. 535, 46 L. Ed. 315 24

Walker v. United States, 116 F. (2d) 458 26
Western Cartridge v. NLRB, 134 F. (2d) 240 18
Woodward v. C. M. & St. P. Railway, 145 Fed. 577 30

PAGE

Statutes.

Sec. 239 Judicial Code, as amended, 28 USCA 346..... 16
Sec. 240 Judicial Code, as amended, by Act of Feb. 13, 1925, 28 USCA 347..... 2
National Labor Relations Act (Act of July 5, 1935, c 372, 49 Stat. 449, 29 U. S. C. 151 et seq.):
Sec. 7 32
Sec. 10 (f)..... 33

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1945.

No. 787.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, and INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

No. 786.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

BRIEF OF DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION IN OPPOSITION TO CERTIORARI.

Opinions Below.

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reported in 151 F. (2d) 854. The prior opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals in this case is reported in 123 F. (2d) 215. The findings of fact, conclusions of law, and order of the National Labor Relations Board are reported in 50 NLRB 241. The prior order of the National Labor Relations Board in this case is reported in 21 NLRB 164.

Jurisdiction.

Decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals was entered October 29, 1945. Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code, as amended by Act of February 13, 1925, Sec. 347 USCA.

Questions Presented.

(All italics are ours.)

(1) Where the Labor Board refused to receive or treat as material, or to give any consideration whatsoever to the sworn testimony of all the employees as to their choice of a labor union, and as to their freedom from outside influence in organizing and operating it; and the Court of Appeals sent the case back to the Board with specific instructions that such testimony is material under the circumstances of the case at bar and must be considered by the Board as material, although the exact weight given it is a matter for the Board; and where the Board on rehearing reasserted that the specific evidence, which it had been directed to treat as material, is actually immaterial, and making it clear beyond doubt that such is its position in the following words (A. 619):

> "Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily designated the DGWU, we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is IMMATERIAL to issues such as those presented in this case," is there any doubt, which should be taken over by this Court on certiorari, as to the correctness of the Court of Appeals' opinion in setting aside the Board's order which is based upon its expressed refusal to consider material evidence as material?

(2) Where the statute creating the Board provides that the Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to control the proceedings of the Labor Board when they violate fundamental rights and due process, using in part the following language:

> "Upon such filing, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Board under subsection (e), and shall have the same exclusive jurisdiction to grant to the Board such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board;" (29 U. S. C. A., ch. 7, Sec. 160) and where this Court has specifically held in National Labor Relations Board v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Company, 318 U. S. 9, 87 L. Ed. 579, that the Circuit Court of Appeals has the power and right to direct the Labor Board to take and receive as material and of some weight specific evidence, is there any reason for this Court to grant certiorari in order to repeat this definite and well-established principle of law?

(3) Where all of the employees, and a majority of the five ex-employees appearing on behalf of the Labor Board, testify or file affidavits and are offered as witnesses that the plant union was the free-will choice of the employees; and where such plant union has been operated effectively for years, securing many settlements of disputes advantageous and satisfactory to the employees; and where the employees have repeatedly petitioned for a secret election and offered to abide by its result if carried on at any time over a period of years, and have been refused such opportunity; and where the only evidence of domination is by inferences, which might be interpreted as favoring either side, as against the practically universal testimony of those who know the facts and whose testimony is unimpeached and uncontradicted—did the Court of Appeals not only err but exceed its discretion in ordering that the testimony of these employees must be considered as material although the exact weight to be given to it is a matter for the Board?

(4) Where the Court of Appeals points out as an additional denial of due process the bias and prejudice of the trial examiner, the fact of his reassignment to take the evidence on the second hearing also, and the fact that his opinion and belief of the immateriality of the evidence of the employees remained fixed and unmodified by the specific direction of the Court of Appeals to the contrary, can there be any question for this Court as to the correctness of the Court of Appeals' opinion and order in setting aside the order of the Labor Board?

(5) Where the treating of substantial and material evidence as wholly immaterial is of itself sufficient to make it necessary to set aside the finding of the Board, is it necessary or useful for this Court to grant certiorari in order to consider whether there might have been other grounds which would also have made it necessary to set aside the order of the Board?

Statutes Involved.

The pertinent provisions of the National Labor Relations Act are set forth in the Appendix, infra, pp. 32-34.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The parties to this matter are the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, an unaffiliated union representing all the workers in the Donnelly Garment Company except those not eligible, and hereafter referred to as the DGWU, respondent herein; the Donnelly Garment Company of Kansas City, Missouri, a Missouri corporation in the business of manufacturing women's dresses, designated as the Company; the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, a widespread organization with offices in many states, referred to as the International; and the National Labor Relations Board, hereafter called the Board.

The statement of facts submitted in the Board's brief is actually its Findings of Fact in the second hearing, and it has prefaced each of its citations to the record by a citation to these findings. It was on the basis of the entire record—not on the findings of fact by the Board—that the Circuit Court of Appeals determined that due process had been denied this respondent. We therefore set forth below a part of the omitted picture. The court below included in its opinion the statement of facts which we contend the evidence shows. (151 F. (2d), l. c. 864-869) and we adopt that statement of facts as ours, and amplify it, with citations to the record, in the following statement:

In the spring of 1937 the International entered the Kansas City labor field with the announced purpose of making itself the bargaining agent for all workers in the local garment manufacturing industry (V 1532, 1549). In the progress of this campaign against workers in plants of other employers near that of the Company, violence was freely used for about thirty days without any affective protection by the local police (VII 2154, XI 4101, 4165-6).

The employees of the Company, mostly women, terrified by these occurrences and by threats of similar or greater force which would be used against them in turn unless they joined the International (IV 1336f, 1336cc, 1336ggg), had a general meeting to consider ways and means of self-protection (VIII 2568, 2920).

On March 27, 1937, a committee of workers retained legal counsel to advise them on means of protection (II 577; IX 3193). The Board is inaccurate when it states (Br. p. 14) that the purpose for which an attorney was hired was to oppose the ILGWU. Its citations to the record do not support that conclusion, but instead clearly state "what we had in mind was an injunction of some kind of protection" (I 176), and at II 556, "we told Mr. Tyler * * * we were desirous of knowing what we could do, or what could be done for us in the way of getting protection against such things (violence) as were occurring at the Missouri, Gordon & Gernes Brothers plants." On April 12, 1937, the newspapers (VII 2154, XI 4177-4179) publicized the decision of the United States Supreme Court sustaining the National Labor Relations Act, calling particular attention to the holding that workers had the right to organize their own unions, affiliated or not, to serve as their bargaining agents under the protection of the Board.

On April 27, 1937, in reaction to the violence, with the advice of their own attorney, the employees voluntarily formed their own union, the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union (II 559-561; IV 1336i, 1336ll-1336oo, 1336ww, 1336iii-1336jjj; also Board witnesses at X 3514, 3581-3582). Practically all in the Kansas City plant attended this meeting which was held in space independent of Company control and without management domination

(VIII 2565-2566, 2914-2915; IX 3006, 3078, 3122, 3187-3188).

An executive committee was selected after careful consideration, and on May 27, 1937, conferred with Mrs. Reed, the managers of the Company, and the attorney for the Company and arrived at a contract concerning wages, hours, and terms of employment and providing, among other things, for a closed shop. This contract has been supplemented by another agreement, increasing wages, negotiated on June 22, 1937, and affected by further negotiations from time to time (I 105, II 580-582, 713-714; III 812). Meetings of the DGWU have been held frequently since then and have been well attended (I 105, II 584, 718; III 830-865; IV 1336m).

Since its organization, the DGWU has functioned continuously and effectively as the chosen forum and bargaining agent of the workers and its activities have been entirely self-supported and self-controlled (I 216-217, 228, 235; II 430, 624, 692-694, 718g, 718r; X 3763-3766, 3774).

On April 6, 1939, the acting regional director for the 17th Region of the National Labor Relations Board filed a complaint against the Company and amended this on April 27, 1939, withdrawing the original charge. The complaint alleged that the Company was engaged in unfair labor practices affecting interstate commerce by dominating the DGWU (A. 369-370). The Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, this party, received a copy of the complaint, the amendment, and notice of hearing as party to the contract with the Company, and upon permission of the director intervened and filed its answer (A. 381-382). This party also then filed with the Board its formal application requesting that the Board hold a secret election at the plant in order to determine the employees' choice of bargaining agent (A. 409-410). The Board did not grant the application for an election, and although an election on several other occasions had been requested, the Board has uniformly refused to act (A 560; III 783; IV 1336qqq; VI 1693-1729; X 3844; XI 3965).

Trial Examiner Batten conducted the hearing for the Board, sustained the complaint, and was sustained in turn by the Board. In November, 1941, the Circuit Court of Appeals remanded the case to the Board (123 F. (2d) 215).

The language of the court in directing that the testimony of the employees as to their choice of a labor union and their reasons for forming it, be received and considered as material, regardless of the particular weight the Board might give to it, is as follows:

> "We have no doubt that the testimony offered by the petitioners in their efforts to prove that the employees of the Donnelly Company formed the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union of their own free will and that the formation and administration of the union was free from employer influence, domination and support, and to explain how and why they came to organize the union, was competent, relevant and material and should have been received. The individuals who form an unincorporated association certainly should know what sort of an organization it is, how it happened to be formed, who influenced its formation, and who controls it. We think there can be no doubt of the right of the members of such an organization to testify to such matters, and that their evidence is admissible regardless of its weight." (l. c. 222.)

The court then said (l. c. 224):

> "That a refusal by an administrative agency such as the National Labor Relations Board to receive and consider competent and material evidence offered by a party to a proceeding before it, amounts to a denial of due process is not open to debate. (Citing cases.)

"The truth is that a controversy tried before a court or before an administrative agency is not ripe for decision until all competent and material evidence proffered by the parties has been received and considered."

The express holding of the court was (l. c. 225):

"Our conclusion is that the petition of the Board for enforcement of the order under review must be denied. We think that the least that the Board can do, in order to cure the defects in its procedure caused by the failure of the Trial Examiner to receive admissible evidence, is to vacate the order and the findings and conclusions upon which it is based to accord to the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner, and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order."

Trial Examiner Batten, over the objection of the DGWU and the Company, again was appointed as Examiner and heard the case in July to September, 1942. He first permitted the Company to introduce testimony of Mrs. Reed, president of the Donnelly Company, and some eleven employees. At the opening of the hearing Examiner Batten stated that the employee testimony was relevant and was material, and that he was agreeable to hearing it (VII 2518). But after the testimony of Mrs. Reed and only eleven employees had been received on behalf of the Company, and before the employees' organization (DGWU) had offered testimony, the Examiner ruled:

> "Then, I will now determine that I have heard enough employee witnesses, both as to the respondent and the intervener.
>
> "So that disposes of that matter" (IX 3255).

The DGWU was permitted to put on six witnesses in surrebuttal, but only as to questions raised previously before the Board (X 3765, 3766, 3770, 3773, 3775, 3777). The Trial Examiner and the Board, after refusing this evidence, reached the same conclusion that they had before (III 764-796). The Board's opinion on this point is:

> "Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily designated the DGWU, we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion derived from our experience in administration of the act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to the issues such as those presented in this case" (A. 619).

On appeal again to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals (151 F. (2d) 854) that court again refused to enforce the order of the Board.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

(1) The court below acted in accordance with established law and no new or novel question is involved. It is not necessary to "probe the mental processes of the Board" in order to know that the Board flatly refused to treat as material vitally important evidence which the Court of Appeals specifically directed the Board to consider as material evidence, for the Board states in so many words that it adheres to its previous opinion that the evidence in question is immaterial. The law is clear that in such situation due process is denied and the Board's order must be set aside as was done by the Circuit Court of Appeals. No good purpose would be served by the granting of certiorari by the Supreme Court merely in order to reassert this principle already firmly established in the law.

(2) The case at bar is not in conflict with the cases relied on by petitioners. We have grouped the cases in the argument in order to show briefly that they are not in point.

(3) This litigation should end. Federal courts have repeatedly found the fact to be that the DGWU is the free-will choice of the employees as bargaining agent and no court has ever found to the contrary. In two hearings of some six weeks each, the Board has completely failed to make a case and in categorically refusing to follow the Circuit Court of Appeals' ruling as to what is material evidence, it has admitted that it is unable to make a case. If it accepts as material, testimony of the employees as to their choice of a labor union and how and why they formed it, the unanimous testimony or affidavits of all of the 1100 employees, plus a majority of the five ex-employees relied on by the Board itself that the DGWU was the free-will choice of the employees, mere inferences would be completely destroyed. If the Board refuses to consider such testimony as material it violates the established principles of law and common sense and it expressly refuses to follow the directions of its supervisory court as to what is material evidence in this case. The Board admits on page 50 of its brief that it cannot establish a case by any ordinary procedure and it does not care to make another effort to do so, its hope being that the Supreme Court will merely enforce the order of the Board and ignore all decisions and opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals. The DGWU has carried on this fight, maintaining its organization and paying all of the expenses of the litigation for seven years, and being ready at any point in that seven years to establish the fact of its being the choice of the employees by secret election, by testimony on oath on the witness stand, and by affidavit. It should be relieved of the burden of any further litigation.

ARGUMENT.

I. The Court Below Acted in Accordance with Established Law and no New or Novel Question Is Involved.

The Circuit Court of Appeals acted within the jurisdiction vested in it by the statute creating the Board, (quoted supra, p. 3.)

Further, the court has acted in accord with the definite and well-established rule of law as specifically stated in the recent case of NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Company, 318 U. S. 9, 87 L. Ed. 579, wherein this Court sustained the Circuit Court of Appeals in its direction to the Labor Board to take and consider certain evidence on a remand (p. 585, L. Ed.). The Board resisted this instruction and decision on the ground that such evidence was either cumulative or immaterial and that therefore the Court of Appeals committed error in directing that it must be taken and considered by the Board. The Supreme Court sustained the Court of Appeals, pointing out that the Court of Appeals has control over the Board in such matters and that such control should not be disturbed unless the Court of Appeals has acted arbitrarily or abused its discretion. This Court held that in order to reverse the Court of Appeals the Supreme Court must not only disagree with the Court of Appeals as to whether, under the circumstances of that case, the evidence in question was material, but it must also find that the Court of Appeals was so grossly wrong as to amount to abuse of discretion. See p. 585:

> "Thus, in order to decide this case in favor of the Board we would have to hold not merely that the evidence of dynamiting would be a matter of indifference in our own view of the case, but that the court designated by statute to exercise discretion in the matter and which desired to know the facts about it before passing on sufficiency of the evidence and the impartiality of the examiner and which thought the finder of the facts should hear and consider such evidence, must not only have been in error but must also have abused its judicial discretion."

So in the case at bar, in order to reverse the Court of Appeals, this Court would not only have to disagree with the Court of Appeals as to whether the sworn testimony of all the employees as to their choice of a bargaining representative and how they arrived at it was material in determining that point, but this Court would have to take the further step of holding that in reaching its decision on such question the Court of Appeals acted arbitrarily and abused its discretion. The decision that the testimony of many witnesses as to their choice, intent and free will is material and must be given some weight in the absence of any evidence the Board may produce that such testimony was perjury, or was so unintelligent that the witnesses did not understand what they were testifying about, is clearly correct. Perhaps every rule has exceptions and even though theoretically it might be urged that such rule, which is as old as the common law itself, might not apply, yet the Court of Appeals had the power and the duty of determining the question of whether it applied here and it would be merely absurd to say that they grossly abused such discretion, or that discretion did not extend to this point, and therefore that certiorari should be granted.

In an effort to distinguish the Indiana & Michigan case the Board points out that in that case the witnesses before the Board were guilty of violence and destruction of property, while in the case at bar there was no showing that the witnesses were themselves guilty of violence, though it must be conceded that there was much violence in the campaign of the International directed toward organization of the Donnelly employees by first organizing the smaller nearby plants and showing the Donnelly employees what would happen to them if they did not join (IV 1336f, 1336y, 1336cc, 1336hh, 1336vv, 1336aaa, 1336ggg, 1336vvv; VIII 2853).

Whether this is a valid distinction or not, and we submit that it is not, at least it completely misses the point of the Indiana and Michigan case. The doctrine of that case is not that the Court of Appeals has the power and duty to direct the taking into consideration of the evidence it holds to be material, only in case such evidence is concerning violence. The holding and the law is that the Court of Appeals has the power and duty to direct the taking and consideration of evidence which it determines as material and important under the circumstances of the case, regardless of whether such evidence concerns violence or any other point that is material to the litigation. This Court has said in the Indiana and Michigan case:

> "But the court is given discretion to see that before a party's rights are finally foreclosed his case has been fairly heard. Findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support, its findings, is heard and weighed" (l. c. 591).

The twice repeated refusal to accept as material and give any weight to the testimony of the employees is conclusive on the denial of due process. A further hearing and opinion on this case would add nothing whatever to the law as set forth in the Indiana & Michigan case.

Nor is there any ruling or finding in the opinion of the court in the Donnelly case that any further hearing is necessary.

As the Board points out in its brief (p. 32) the Court of Appeals, after twice firmly pointing out to the Board that the testimony of the employees was material, referred to the possibility of certiorari. Obviously its position was that it had no doubt whatever as to the materiality of this evidence and the necessity of its being considered as material, but that if the Board was still unwilling to accept this view the only possible chance to avoid complying with it was application for certiorari in which the Supreme Court would either approve the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals or determine that that court had so misunderstood the law or exceeded its discretion as to make a hearing before the Supreme Court necessary.

In an earlier opinion in this same controversy the same judge pointed out in reference to another matter, that if the DGWU and the Company felt that error had been committed by the court against them, "The error is one which properly can be corrected only by the Supreme Court of the United States on certiorari" (123 F. (2d) l. c. 220-221), and it was equally clear that such language did not mean that in the court's opinion certiorari should be granted.

If the Court of Appeals had desired to intimate that the Supreme Court should grant certiorari it would have taken the appropriate action in such situation: i. e., certification to the Supreme Court under the provisions of the Judicial Code, Sec. 239, as amended, 28 USCA 346 (see appendix).

II. The Case at Bar Is Not in Conflict with the Cases Relied on by Petitioners

As cited by the Board:

1a. In holding that the Board was required to consider employee testimony.

In the case of Bethlehem Steel Co. v. NLRB, 120 F. (2d) 641, the court's ruling with regard to employees' testimony deals with the effect their testimony would have on other evidence which had previously established the fact that the Plans were started in 1918, were concededly Company supported and managed for nearly 20 years prior to 1937, and at that time were amended in an attempt to make them conform to the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act. The Court found, "The amendments could not erase from the minds of the employees the well-known and long-continued Company encouragement and approval of the Plans" (l. c. 646).

Facts similar to those in the above case, i. e., a long period of admitted company-control and management of a plant union with amendments in 1937 to conform to the Act—also are found in the following cases cited by the Board:

Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. NLRB, 114 F. (2d) 930 (see l. c. 937 and 941).
American Enka Corp. v. NLRB, 119 F. (2d) 60 (see l. c. 61 and 63).
NLRB v. Newport News Shipbuilding Co., 308 U. S. 241, 84 L. Ed. 219 (see l. c. 244, 251).

The Donnelly Garment Workers' Union was organized in 1937 and hence there could not have been amendments made in an effort to conform, and thus no "Company encouragement and approval" to be erased from the minds of the employees. Therefore, the ruling of the Circuit Court that in this case and in these circumstances the testimony of employees was material was not in conflict with the Bethlehem case or any of the other above cited cases and was within the discretionary powers of that court.

Further, these cases do not deal with, give consideration to, nor determine the effect of a remand by the Circuit Court of Appeals to the Board with instructions to hear and consider employee testimony. They represent petitions to review the Board's original order.

In Western Cartridge v. NLRB, 134 F. (2d) 240, the company refused to recognize an A. F. of L. Local No. 22574, for which the employees had voted and which the Board had certified, but instead the company continued to deal with and support the Independent (l. c. 243); and the Independent (as a petitioner for review of the Board's order) contended it was denied a fair trial because its individual members were not permitted to testify. On this point the court said:

> "To be sure, as a general rule, findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support, the Board's findings is heard and weighed" (l. c. 244).

However, in that case, the Company having refused to deal with the Local for which the employees had voted, and there being "cogent, specific evidence of the Company's interference" the court held the Independent had received a fair hearing (l. c. 245).

The case here ~~certified~~ considered is in agreement, not in conflict, with the above stated general rule. Here the employees voted for the DGWU as their choice for a bargaining agent; here there is not "cogent, specific evidence" upon which to base a finding that the employees had received a fair hearing.

Also in NLRB v. New Era Dye Co., 118 F. (2d) 500, the company refused to bargain with the authorized union. Twenty-five of the 39 employees voted for the union, and the company offered employee testimony to show that 21 later revoked their authorization. The court ruled that, the company having committed proven unfair labor practices before the revocations occurred, such employee testimony was not material (l. c. 505).

In the following cases cited by the Board, it did receive and did consider a substantial amount of employee testimony. Therefore, the holding by the court in the instant case that previously refused employee testimony must be received and considered by the Board could not be in conflict with rulings in these cited cases on the admissibility of employee testimony:

NLRB v. Brown Paper Mill Co., 108 F. (2d) 867 (shows testimony by 708 members, l. c. 937).

Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. NLRB, 114 F. (2d) 930 (testimony received from "various employees," l. c. 937).

American Enka Corp. v. NLRB, 119 F. (2d) 60 (a large number of employees testified, l. c. 62).

NLRB v. Newport News Shipbuilding Co., 308 U. S. 241, 84 L. Ed. 219 (results of secret ballot were in the record, l. c. 248).

NLRB v. Automotive Maintenance Mach. Co., 315 U. S. 282, Rev. 116 F. (2d) 350 (testimony of "nearly all of the employees was included," l. c. 356).

16: In holding that the Examiner was disqualified to preside at the hearing on remand.

The Court in NLRB v. Air Associates, Inc., 121 F. (2d) 586, found that inasmuch as the Board disregarded the trial examiner's report, that even though he were biased it was not prejudicial to the parties (l. c. 588). In the subject case, the Board adopted the examiner's reports on both hearings.

Of like effect is the holding in NLRB v. Weirton Steel Co., 135 F. (2d) 494. Here the allegedly biased trial examiner was superseded during the original hearing, and he made no intermediate report. The Court found that the effect of his bias was overcome by the appointment of a second examiner who did afford a full and unbiased hearing. The facts and the issues regarding the trial examiner in the above two cases are such as to make any holdings of the courts as to bias in them not in conflict with the case at bar.

A representative proceeding as to the unit appropriate, not a complaint proceeding as here, is in issue in NLRB v. Botany Worsted Mills, 133 F. (2d) 876, l. c. 882. Further, it was contended in the Botany case that the appointment as a trial examiner one who had conducted the preliminary investigation established, per se, his bias. The court held that this did not preclude his affording the parties a fair hearing.

This is substantially different from appointing, over the objection of the parties, the same examiner for a second hearing when he had previously announced publicly and had recorded his opinion on all the issues involved.

The decisions in the two cases: Ex parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35, 57 L. Ed. 1379, and Berger

v. U. S., 255 U. S. 22, 65 L. Ed. 481, deal (1) with the right of a senior judge to compel Judge Chatfield to continue with a bankruptcy hearing, and (2) with the right of Judge Landis to preside at a criminal trial. In both cases the point was whether the respective judges should continue in the original (not remanded) proceedings and to hear the cases, after affidavits of prejudice had been filed against them; not as here, where the point involved is whether the examiner is a proper party to hear the case on remand, after he has once rendered his opinion on the issues. Petitioners (NLRB and ILGWU) in the case at bar indicate in their briefs that the court held that the reason the examiner was disqualified was because of his "erroneous rulings." The fact is that the court held he was disqualified because he had prejudged the issues—not that he had made mistakes in ruling on the law (151 F. (2d), l. c. 870).

In U. S. v. Morgan, 313 U. S. 409, 85 L. Ed. 1429, the Secretary of Agriculture had made public statements to the press which were said to show his bias. The court found that, the Secretary having admitted that his statements were made on an erroneous understanding of the court's prior decision and having shown that he did consider and weigh the market conditions, the previous statements showing bias were overcome. The court concluded that "nothing in this record disturbs" the assumption that the Secretary judged this "particular controversy fairly." (l. c. 421.) In the case at bar, there is no admission on the part of the examiner that he might have been in error in his original rulings, nor any showing that he did consider or weigh the evidence which the Circuit Court of Appeals has twice held to be material.

2. In holding that evidence should have been received and considered showing DGWU contracts contained similar provisions to ILGWU contracts.

The company in Bethlehem Steel Co. v. NLRB (supra) was denied issuance of a subpoena to McDonald for the purpose of questioning him regarding "dates, scope, duration and terms" of SWOC agreements. In that case similar provisions in contracts made by the plans with Bethlehem had not previously been put in issue by the Board. The court found that under those circumstances the designated questions to be asked McDonald were irrelevant (l. c. 651).

The decision of the court on that state of facts cannot be in conflict with the one at bar, wherein the DGWU's contracts had been put in issue by the Board, were relied on by it in its findings, and determined by it to be a "sham" (l. c. 862, 864). DGWU's offer was to establish that provisions in its contracts were bona fide and usual 151 F. (2d), l. c. 868).

3. In holding as material to the issues evidence that ILGWU admits to membership employees having supervisory duties.

In New Idea, Inc. v. NLRB, 117 F. (2d) 517, the Board did receive and did weigh testimony that "supervisory" employees were eligible to be, and in fact were, members of both the Association and the A. F. of L. (l. c. 523). In the DGWU case the examiner refused to receive evidence that "supervisory" employees were admitted to the ILGWU, or that the employees he labeled as "supervisory" were not usually so considered by the garment industry (supra, l. c. 875).

There is no showing in either NLRB v. Aintree Corp., 132 F. (2d) 469, or in International Assn. of Machinists v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 72, 85 L. Ed. 50, that due process was not afforded all parties, or that all the evidence proffered by the respective companies was not received. Neither is any comment made in these two cases as to the effect of membership of "supervisory" employees in ILGWU and/or "The Better Union" in the first case; or in the A. F. of L. and U. A. W. in the second case. Those cases do not have occasion to rule on issues in any way similar to the case at bar and, therefore, the opinions therein do not conflict with this decision.

We believe that regardless of whatever degree of importance the court may attach to the denial of due process by reason of the bias of the examiner, the error in his reappointment for the second hearing or the refusal to admit evidence of other contracts, the decision of the Court of Appeals must stand because of the clear refusal of the Board to treat vitally important material evidence as material. No decision complies with the due process requirement where that situation is shown to exist.

The Board cites in its petition six cases which deal with procedural matters, the gist of which is as follows:

Three to show right of this Court to review interlocutory decisions (pages 34 and 35):

Panama R. R. v. Napier Shipping Co., 166 U. S. 280, 41 L. Ed. 1004, determines jurisdiction in admiralty case, when Circuit Court of Appeals limited its second review to question of damages.

Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Wolf Bros., 240 U. S. 251, 60 L. Ed. 629, determines right of Sp. Ct. in patent infringement case to notice and rectify errors in interlocutory proceedings.

Simmons Co. v. Grier Bros. Co., 258 U. S. 82, 66 L. Ed. 475, deals with Bill of Review in patent infringement, and holds that the Bill may be granted only after final decree. Case also sets forth when a decree is interlocutory and when final.

And three to show that this litigation should end (pg. 43):

Sorensen v. Pyrate Co., 65 F. (2d) 982, on second hearing after remand for assessment of damages, defendants for the first time attacked validity of contract. Court said this defense should have been urged at first trial, and defenses should not be presented by piecemeal.

Roberts v. Cooper, 20 Howard 467, 15 L. Ed. 969, deals with what matters the Supreme Court will consider on second writ, and concludes that "none of the questions before it on first writ can be reheard or examined upon the second" (l. c. 973), else obstinate litigants could compel the court to listen to criticisms of their own opinions.

U. S. Trust Co. v. N. M., 183 U. S. 535, 46 L. Ed. 315. This is a suit brought by Territory of New Mexico to collect taxes, and liability is denied in toto. The District Court had dismissed the intervening petition, stating it did not show on its face a valid claim. The effect of the Supreme Court's having reversed that order, was that the inquiry starts with the adjudicated fact that a valid claim is presented (l. c. 319).

We heartily agree that this litigation should end now. As cited by ILGWU:

This petitioner (Br. p. 25) only partially states the ruling of Chief Justice Hughes in Morgan v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 82 L. Ed. 1129. The full quotation is: "It was not the function of the Court to probe the mental processes of the Secretary in reaching his conclusion if he gave the hearing which the law required." In both this case and the one at bar the courts have ruled that the parties did not receive "the hearing which the law required." But the Court in this case did not need to resort to "probing" to ascertain the mental processes of the Examiner and the Board, for the Record shows that both considered and declared as immaterial the proffered employee testimony in the first hearing (A. 560, VI 1693) and continued to so assert after the Court remanded the case (A. 619, X 3844).

We find in NLRB v. Bradford Dyeing, 310 U. S. 318, 60 Sup. Ct. 918, 84 L. Ed. 1226, that the Court found that the rulings "manifested liberality," the proceedings were conducted in a manner calculated to bring a just result; and the rights of a full and fair hearing were "solicitously guarded" (l. c. 1242). The findings have been the direct opposite to the above, by the courts who have reviewed the proceedings herein (123 F. (2d) 215, 225; and 151 F. (2d) 854; see as to "rulings," points 3, 4, 5 and 7; as to "conduct of hearings," points 1 and 2; as to "fair trial," the conclusion, l. c. 875.)

The point in issue in Federal Com. Com. v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134, 60 Sup. Ct. 437, 84 L. Ed. 656, is whether, under remand from the Court of Appeals to reconsider an application for a broadcasting station, the Commission must confine its consideration to matters presented in the original record (l. c. 660). This Court ruled that the Commission was not confined to the original record but should reconsider the application on a comparative basis, and further stated: "On review the court must thus correct errors of law and on remand the Commission is bound to act upon the correction" (l. c. 663).

In Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 S. Ct. 443, 84 L. Ed. 664, this Court said that the only relevant difference between this case and the Pottsville case (supra) was that here the Commission proposed also to receive new evidence. This Court held that whatever new evidence was necessary for the Commission to receive in order to discharge its duty under the law, should be received.

There is no conflict between the two cited cases and the one here considered. The issues of a fair hearing are not involved in the cited cases, but rather the scope of the hearing upon remand. However, all three cases have held that the courts do have the power to "correct errors of law and on remand the" administrative agency "is bound to act upon the correction."

This petitioner cites in support of its contention that the Court erred in holding due process was denied because of the designation of the same trial examiner, five cases:

In Walker v. United States, 116 Fed. (2d) 458, a conspiracy case, the Court states that no action or conduct of the judge indicative of bias is alleged except erroneous rulings of the court, and bias and prejudice must be urged on something other than rulings in the case (l. c. 462).

Likewise, in Ryan v. United States, 99 Fed. (2d) 864, the ruling is the same, and the court adds, "If there is error in such rulings, it may be corrected on appeal" (l. c. 871).

In an action for injunctive relief in Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Co., 124 Fed. (2d) 440, the judge having evinced irritation over the delay of the parties in bringing the case to trial and having made adverse rulings to Refior, was said to have shown bias, and an affidavit was filed against him. The Court held that a judge may not be ousted because of adverse rulings, since they are reviewable otherwise (l. c. 444).

In contempt proceedings of O'Malley v. United States, 128 Fed. (2d) 676, the Court said that "Judges may, and indeed must, make rulings as matters present themselves, and having done so are not subject to a charge of prejudice" (l. c. 685).

Berger v. United States, 255 U. S. 22, 41 St. Ct. 230, is also cited. This case we have discussed supra.

In all of the above five cases the issue involved the effect of erroneous rulings, not the denial of due process, because of the appointment of the same judge to hear the second time the same case, wherein he had already announced his decision on the issues, as in the case at bar. Therefore, the rulings in the cited cases are not in conflict with the one at bar.

III. This Litigation Should End.

The Board says in its brief at page 43, quoting from Sorensen v. Pyrate Corp., 65 F. (2d) 982, 965, "* * * the proper administration of justice demands that there be an end to litigation * * *." With this statement we unqualifiedly agree, and to it we would add an equally well-known principle that "Justice delayed is justice denied." There have been some fifteen opinions in the Federal and Supreme Court Reporters on the Donnelly situation —injunction, damages and labor dispute (see table of cases in appendix). Twice the Labor Board after hearings of some six or seven weeks has completely failed to make a case and has in its second opinion admitted that it cannot follow the law and make a case by its declaration that, in spite of the Court of Appeals' opinion and ruling that testimony of employees is material and must be considered, the Board is "Impelled to adhere to the opinion * * * that evidence of this nature is immaterial. * * *" (A. 619). After very substantial hearings Federal courts have repeatedly found the fact to be established beyond any doubt that the DGWU is a bona fide labor union formed and administered by the free-will choice of the employees without any domination or coercion of the employer.[1] In some of these opinions the court has refrained from any finding or opinion on this point, but in no decision has any court expressed any opposite view or conclusion as to the evidence presented over many weeks of testimony and at various times over a period of seven years. Repeatedly employees have testified that the DGWU was their free-will choice of a bargaining agent and all employees in good faith have been ready to so testify over a period of seven years. At least twice the testimony of all employees has been tendered in open court or before the Labor Board and the solemn

---

[1]We have included in this brief only two excerpts from the Court's opinions:

21 F. S. 807, l. c. 809 (1937):

"Among these employees there are no members of defendant union shown by the evidence, and no division exists among them. The proofs overwhelmingly establish that they are neither company inspired nor dominated. To insure their full independence of action, they have consulted able counsel of their own choosing, and have perfected their organization in full accord with the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U. S. C. A. 151 et seq."

And the last is like the first:

151 F. (2d) 854, l. c. 877 (1945):

"For more than seven years the employees have defended the plant union, at great expense to themselves, before every tribunal in which its integrity has been called in question. Throughout this period they have been fully advised of their rights under the National Labor Relations Act. There have been no defections from their ranks. None of them permitted to testify have been impeached on the witness stand. The credibility of none of them has been attacked. Five years after the organization of the plant union all of its members have testified to their deliberate choice of it as their agency for collective bargaining with their employer. In this situation there is no room, in my opinion, for the inference that these employees have been and continue to be, the victims of an illegal coercion by means unknown to them and too subtle to be susceptible of proof, or from the inference that they have surrendered their right freely to choose their labor affiliation in return for the occasional inconsequential use of the Garment Company's telephones, mimeograph machines, and office facilities."

The following citations say substantially the same:

99 F. (2d) 309, 313-4 (1938).

119 F. (2d) 892, 893 (1941).

123 Fed. (2d) 215, 222 (1941).

55 F. S. 587, 490 (1944).

affidavits of all the employees to this fact is in the record in this case. The Board asserts (Br. p. 9) that it "called several (5) of the 1,200 employees, who testified contrary to the offer of proof." This is not a correct statement. These five ex-employees had vigorous complaints as to the way they were treated by the Company or its officers or the plant union, but when it comes to the question as to whether the employees formed the plant union by their own free-will choice and in accordance with their own wishes, at least the majority of these five Board witnesses readily agree that it was the free-will choice of the employees, which is the very fact petitioner put them on the stand to disprove and, after a search of several years for such testimony, these five disgruntled ex-employees are the only witnesses the Board did put on or offered to put on to testify that the DGWU was not the free-will choice of the employees. Etta Dorsey and Lola Skeens both stated on the stand that their prior statements that the employees formed the union and operated it without any outside influence was true (IX 3383; X 3463). Their testimony shows that what they were interested in and what they wished to talk about were their personal grievances against the Company or the plant union. But so far as the question of the actual choice of the overwhelming majority of the employees goes, they readily agree that the employees wanted their own plant union. Geneva Copenhaver testified in the second hearing, as one of these five ex-employee Board witnesses, that in her opinion it was the violence of the International against nonmember employees at points some eight blocks away and the desire to secure protection from such contemplated attacks upon themselves, which caused the employees to form their own union (X 3514). Repeatedly the plant union has requested and been denied an official but completely secret election to demonstrate the fact of their choice yet again. One of the attorneys for the International is in the record as having admitted that the employees do not want the International as their bargaining representative but that the employer must compel them to accept it or go through this litigation (V 1402).

Now the dilemma of the Board in this extraordinary situation of the evidence is obvious. If they admit that the testimony of employees and ex-employees as to the voluntary actual free-will choice of the DGWU as their bargaining agent is of any weight whatever (i. e., is material), then it is so strong, so unweakened and so overwhelmingly in support of such undominated choice (including the testimony of the Board's own witnesses) that it cannot be effectively opposed by mere inferences drawn from claims which prove nothing in themselves and which generally do not exist at all unless weak evidence against the overwhelming weight of all the testimony is accepted.

The unanimous testimony of witnesses who know the facts and who are not in any way shown to have committed perjury or misunderstood the facts, or to have been contradicted by opposing witnesses, cannot be overcome by mere inference, and especially when the Board has the burden of proof. (Woodward v. C. M. & St. P. Railway, 145 Fed. 577, 582; Cupples v. NLRB, 106 Fed. (2d) 100, l. c. 104; NLRB v. A. S. Abell, 97 Fed. (2d) 951, l. c. 957; NLRB v. Mathieson, 114 Fed. (2d) 796, l. c. 801; Quaker State Oil v. NLRB, 119 Fed. (2d) 631, l. c. 632; L. Grief & Bro. v. NLRB, 108 Fed. (2d) 551, l. c. 558; NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding, 135 Fed. (2d) 15, l. c. 25; NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, 99 Fed. (2d) 153, l. c. 177; Donnelly Garment Company v. NLRB, 123 Fed. (2d) 215, l. c. 224; NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9, 87 L. Ed. 579, l. c. 592.)

On the other hand, if the Board refuses to consider as material the testimony of all of those who know the fact to be determined it violates the simplest principles of evidence, common sense and fair play, and also the express and explicit ruling of its supervisory court in this very case as to what is material evidence. The Board chooses the second of these two alternatives as the lesser of two evils. It urges on the last page of its petition that the Court of Appeals has twice refused to enforce the Board's order, "On some procedural or due process question," and that it might do so again, and it therefore requests that the Supreme Court simply ignore the function and duty of the Court of Appeals and issue a decree enforcing the Board's order, in the teeth of the clear lack of due process and the Board's flatly declared intention of not abiding by due process, and of the overwhelming and conclusive evidence that such action would deprive the employees of the very rights which the Wagner Act was passed to secure to them. If the Court of Appeals no longer has power or authority or discretion to pass on questions of materiality of evidence and due process, after repeated, full and deliberate hearings, then order and responsibility have disappeared from judicial proceedings.

We respectfully submit that the petition for certiorari should be denied.

Respectfully submitted,

FRANK E. TYLER,
Counsel for Donnelly Garment Workers' Union.

GOSSETT, ELLIS, DIETRICH & TYLER,
Of Counsel.

APPENDIX.

Sec. 239 Judicial Code, amended, 28 U. S. C. A. Ch. 9, Sec. 346, amended:

Certificates of questions by circuit courts of appeals and Courts of Appeals of District of Columbia. In any case, civil or criminal, in a circuit court of appeals, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the court at any time may certify to the Supreme Court of the United States any questions or propositions of law concerning which instructions are desired for the proper decision of the cause; and thereupon the Supreme Court may either give binding instructions on the questions and propositions certified or may require that the entire record in the cause be sent up for its consideration, and thereupon shall decide the whole matter in controversy in the same manner as if it had been brought there by appeal.

National Labor Relations Act (Act of July 5, 1935, c. 372, 49 Stat. 449, 29 U. S. C. 151, et seq.):

Rights of Employees.

Sec. 7. Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

Sec. 8. It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer—

(1) To interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7.

(2) To dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it * * *

(3) By discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization: Provided, That nothing in this Act, or in the National Industrial Recovery Act (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, secs. 701-712), as amended from time to time, or in any code or agreement approved or prescribed thereunder, or in any other statute of the United States, shall preclude an employer from making an agreement with a labor organization (not established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined in this Act as an unfair labor practice) to require as a condition of employment membership therein, if such labor organization is the representative of the employees as provided in section 9 (a), in the appropriate collective bargaining unit covered by such agreement when made.

Prevention of Unfair Labor Practices—Powers of Board Generally.

Review of final order of Board on petition to court:

Sec. 10 (f) " * * * upon such filing, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Board under subsection (e), and shall have the same exclusive jurisdiction to grant to the Board such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board; * * *"

Donnelly Opinions.

On Labor Board Litigation

21 NLRB 164
123 F. (2d) 215
50 NLRB 241
151 F. (2d) 854

On Injunction

20 Fed. Supp. 767
21 Fed. Supp. 807
304 U. S. 243, 82 L. Ed. 1316
23 Fed. Supp. 998
99 F. (2d) 309
305 U. S. 662, 83 L. Ed. 430
119 F. (2d) 892
121 F. (2d) 561
47 F. Supp. 61
47 F. Supp. 65
47 F. Supp. 67
55 F. Supp. 572
147 F. (2d) 246
55 F. Supp. 587

FILE COPY

OCT 30 1946

Nos. 38 and 39.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1946.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION,

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

BRIEF FOR DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

FRANK E. TYLER,
GOSSETT, ELLIS, DIETRICH & TYLER,
Attorneys for Intervener-Petitioner Donnelly Garment Workers' Union.

INDEX.

	PAGE
Opinions Below	1
Jurisdiction	2
Statement of Facts	3
Summary of Argument and Questions Presented	32
Argument:
I. A decision in favor of the Board and against the intervener in this case would be a denial and a stultification of the provisions and purposes of the National Labor Relations Act, and the establishment and enforcement of the exact reverse of the principle that the Act was enacted to enforce. It would deny the support of the law to the union which is beyond question the actual free choice of the employees	35
II. When the Court of Appeals on the first appeal from the Labor Board expressly directed that the testimony of employees should be considered material evidence on the rehearing, such ruling became the law of the case and the refusal of the Labor Board to comply with it makes it necessary that the order of the Board be set aside and its complaint dismissed	67
(a) The situation in the case at bar	67
(b) The application of the Rule	75
(c) The Indiana and Michigan Electric case	82
(d) The effect of the Administrative Procedure Act	89
III. The Findings of Fact by the Board are not Supported by Substantial Evidence	92
(a) The Findings Based on Inference and Suspicion	92

PAGE

(b) The Board's witnesses 110

IV. Intervener was denied due process and a fair trial 126

(a) The bias and prejudice of the examiner 126

(b) The refusal of the examiner and the Board to either receive or consider as material the important and specific evidence for the taking and consideration of which the case was specifically remanded by the Circuit Court of Appeals 129

Conclusion 137

Appendix:

(a) Excerpts from discussion on the Federal Administrative Act in the U. S. Senate 139

(b) Additional appropriate parts of the National Labor Relations Act 143

Table of Cases Cited.

Alabama Title & T. Co. v. Millsap, 71 Fed. (2d) 518 130

American Alliance Insurance Co. v. Brady Tr. & S. Co., 101 Fed. (2d) 144 130

Appalachian Electric Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 93 Fed. (2d) 985 ..... 122, 130

Bahan Textile Mch. Co. Inc. v. United Electrical Radio & Mch. Works, 43 NLRB 97 56

Ballston-Stillwater v. National Labor Relations Board, 98 Fed. (2d) 758 ..... 48, 121

Becker v. Miller, 7 Fed. (2d) 293 130

Berger v. U. S., 255 U. S. 22, 65 L. Ed. 481, 41 Sup. Ct. 230 128

Berger v. U. S., 255 U. S. 22, 65 L. Ed. 481, Sup. Ct. 230 128

PAGE

Claiborne-Reno Company v. E. I. Dupont, 77 Fed. (2d) 565, 5 C. J. S. 1964 76
Consolidated Aircraft Case, 46 National Labor Relations Board 1120 122
Consolidated Edison v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 197, 83 L. Ed. 126, 59 Sup. Ct. 206 49
Cupples Co. Mfg. v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 Fed. (2d) 100 ..... 49, 98

Deposit Guar. Bk. & T. Co. v. U. S., 48 Fed. Supp. 369 130
Donnelly Garment Company v. Dubinsky, 55 Fed. Supp. 587 44
Donnelly Garment Co. et al. v. International, 21 Fed. Supp. 807 42
Donnelly Garment Company v. National Labor Relations Board, 123 Fed. (2d) 215 ..... 58, 80, 134
Donnelly Garment Company v. National Labor Relations Board, 151 Fed. (2d) 854 ..... 49, 82

Eastern Cherokees v. U. S., 225 U. S. 572, 56 L. Ed. 1212, 32 S. Ct. 707 75
Edward G. Budd Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, 142 Fed. (2d) 922 110

Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134, 84 L. Ed. 656, 60 Sup. Ct. 437 76
Federal Trade Com. v. Stand. Ed. Soc., 97 Fed. (2d) 513 81
Foote Bros. Gear and Machine Corp. v. NLRB, 114 Fed. (2d) 611 64

George v. Cap. Traction Co., 295 Fed. 965 130
Goldwyn Pict. v. Howells Sales, 287 Fed. 100 81
Gung You v. Nagle, 34 Fed. (2d) 848 130
Gunning v. Colley, 281 U. S. 90, 74 L. Ed. 720, 50 Sup. Ct. 231 130

H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 514, 85 L. Ed. 309, 61 Sup. Ct. 320 100

PAGE

Henning v. Eldridge, 33 N. E. 754 81
Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 113 Fed. (2d) 85 ..... 36, 48, 50

Inland Steel v. National Labor Relations Board, 109 Fed. (2d) 9 127
International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union v. Donnelly et al., 119 Fed. (2d) 892 42
International Ass'n of Machinists v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 72, 85 L. Ed. 50, 61 Sup. Ct. 83 100
Interstate Com. Com. v. Chic. R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 218 U. S. 88, 30 Sup. Ct. 651, 54 L. Ed. 946 ..... 52, 74

Jeffery-DeWitt Insulator Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 91 Fed. (2d) 134 122

L. Grief & Bro. v. National Labor Relations Board, 108 Fed. (2d) 551 ..... 49, 54
Link-Belt Co. v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 584, 85 L. Ed. 368, 61 Sup. Ct. 358 101
Litchfield v. Dubuque, 74 U. S. 270, 19 L. Ed. 150, 7 Wall. 270 81

Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 112 Fed. (2d) 545 ..... 49, 121, 122, 130, 132
Martel Mills Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 114 Fed. (2d) 624 ..... 62, 122, 132
Midland Steel Products v. National Labor Relations Board, 113 Fed. (2d) 800 121
Montgomery Ward v. National Labor Relations Board, 103 Fed. (2d) 147 128
Morgan Sheep Commission Co. v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 82 L. Ed. 1129, 58 Sup. Ct. 999 ..... 51, 74, 127

National Labor Relations Board v. A. S. Abell, 97 Fed. (2d) 951 ..... 51, 130
National Labor Relations Board v. Asheville Hosiery Co., 108 Fed. (2d) 288 122
National Labor Relations Board v. Bell Oil & Gas Co., 98 Fed. (2d) 405 ..... 64, 134

PAGE

National Labor Relations Board v. Columbian Enameling and Stamping Co., 306 U. S. 292, 83 L. Ed. 660, 59 Sup. Ct. 501 ..... 122, 130
National Labor Relations Board v. Draper Corp., 145 Fed. (2d) 199 121
National Labor Relations Board v. Ford Motor Co., 114 Fed. (2d) 905 121
National Labor Relations Board v. Gluck, 144 Fed. (2d) 847 ..... 36, 49
National Labor Relations Board v. Indiana & Michigan Elec. Co., 124 Fed. (2d) 50, 318 U. S. 9, 87 L. Ed. 579, 63 Sup. Ct. 394 ..... 59, 82
National Labor Relations Board v. International Shoe Co., 116 Fed. (2d) 31 121
National Labor Relations Board v. Lion Shoe Co., 97 Fed. (2d) 448 ..... 49, 121
National Labor Relations Board v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 114 Fed. (2d) 796 50
National Labor Relations Board v. Sands Mfg. Co., 96 Fed. (2d) 721; 306 U. S. 332, 83 L. Ed. 682, 59 Sup. Ct. 508 ..... 48, 64, 122, 130
National Labor Relations Board v. Sun Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, 135 Fed. (2d) 15 ..... 35, 48, 54
National Labor Relations Board v. Swank Products, 108 Fed. (2d) 872 48
National Labor Relations Board v. Thompson Products, 97 Fed. (2d) 13 ..... 123, 137
National Labor Relations Board v. Union Pacific Stages, 99 Fed. (2d) 153 ..... 49, 57, 137
National Labor Relations Board v. Vincennes Steel Corp., 117 Fed. (2d) 169 51
N. Y. & Cuba Mail S. S. Co. v. Cont. Ins. Co., 32 Fed. Sup. 951 130
Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Pub. Util. Com., 301 U. S. 292, 81 L. Ed. 1093, 57 Sup. Ct. 724 ..... 51, 52, 74
Pennsylvania Railroad v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333, 77 L. Ed. 819, 53 Sup. Ct. 391 ..... 63, 65, 123

Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. NLRB, 313 U. S. 146, 61 Sup. Ct. 908, 85 L. Ed. 1251 ..... 51, 74
Quaker State Oil v. National Labor Relations Board, 119 Fed. (2d) 631 54
Railroad Com. v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., 302 U. S. 388, 82 L. Ed. 319, 58 Sup. Ct. 334 ..... 51, 74
Sanford Fork & Tool Co., In Re., 160 U. S. 247, 40 L. Ed. 414, 16 Sup. Ct. 291 81
Smith v. First National Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 97 Am. Dec. 59 63
Smyth v. Klauder, 52 Fed. (2d) 109 81
Southport Pet. Co. v. NLRB, 315 U. S. 100, 86 L. Ed. 718, 62 Sup. Ct. 452 83
Staley v. National Labor Relations Board, 7 Labor Relations Reporter 302 121
St. Joseph Stock Yards Company v. U. S., 298 U. S. 38, 80 L. Ed. 1033, 56 Sup. Ct. 720 ..... 51, 52, 74
Stone v. Stone, 136 Fed. (2d) 761 130
Tribune v. Emery Mot. Liv. Co., 170 N. E. 772 81
Winn v. Cons. Coach Corp., 65 Fed. (2d) 256 130
Woodward v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 145 Fed. 577 50

Statutes.

29 U. S. C. A., p. 240 143
Chapter 324, Laws of 79th Congress, 2nd Sec., Public Law 404 89

Texts.

5 C. J. S., Par. 1964, p. 1501 ..... 77, 81
32 C. J. S., Par. 581, 585 136

Miscellaneous.

Congressional Record, 79th Congress, 2nd Session, Vol. 92, pages 2198, 2199, 2200 139
Supreme Court Rule—No. 27(d), 83 Law Ed. 1646 8

Cases Involving DGWU and International Connected With Same General Dispute Now Before This Court.

NLRB Litigation:

1941 (123 F. (2d) 215)—Petition of Board for enforcement of its order was denied "Because of lack of due process in the hearing before the Board," and the case was remanded with instructions:

> "To accord to the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the trial examiner; and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order." (l. c. 225.)

1945 (151 Fed. (2d) 854)—Prayer of Board for order enforcing its decree denied. The court said:

> "Our conclusion is that the Company and the plant union have not yet had the full and fair trial to which they are constitutionally entitled." (l. c. 875.)

Injunction:

August, 1937 (20 F. Supp. 767)—Court overruled motion to dissolve temporary restraining order, which it had issued on July 5, 1937.

December, 1937 (21 F. Supp. 807)—Injunction granted to DGWU by three-judge court.

May, 1938 (304 U. S. 243, 82 L. Ed. 1316)—Vacated judgment of three-judge court, as International mistakenly appealed direct to this Court. (l. c. 1321, 1323.)

July, 1938 (23 F. Supp. 998)—Judge Collet dissolved temporary restraining order on the ground that the allegations in amended bill did not comply with the Norris-LaGuardia Act. (l. c. 1001.)

October, 1938 (99 Fed. (2d) 309)—Reversed decision of Judge Collet, holding that if allegations of petition were true, the provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act had been met.

January, 1939 (83 L. Ed. 430, 305 U. S. 662)—International's petition for writ of certiorari denied.

June, 1939—Not officially reported, but see 1616a-1616p, Vol. V, for portions of findings and opinion by Judge Miller, granting injunction.

June, 1941 (119 F. (2d) 892)—Decree appealed from was reversed and case remanded for want of jurisdiction, as it was predicated solely upon Sherman Act, which Act, shortly before this decision, had been held as inapplicable to labor unions. (l. c. 898.)

July, 1941 (121 F. (2d) 561)—The court modified its decree of June, 1941, by including in its opinion that the case was remanded "for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this Court." (l. c. 564.)

1944 (55 F. Sup. 587)—Injunction denied on the premise that if a present threat to the plaintiff did not exist, then equity should not interfere. (l. c. 603.)

1946 (154 Fed. (2d) 38)—CCA affirmed trial court's denial of injunction on basis that the findings as to jurisdiction and power of the court were "not clearly erroneous" (l. c. 45) on issues necessary to its powers and jurisdiction.

Damages:

1944 (55 F. Sup. 572)—Court denied the International recovery on $10,000.00 and $2,000.00 bond; and "in light of all the circumstances" awarded only $2,000.00 as expenses and attorneys' fees under the $25,000.00 bond. (l. c. 586, 587.)

1945 (147 Fed. (2d) 246)—Judgment of District Court affirmed. (l. c. 255.)

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1946.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

Nos. 38 and 39.

BRIEF FOR DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

Opinions Below.

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, now before this Court because of the grant of petition for certiorari filed by the Labor Board and the International, is represented in 151 Fed. (2d) 854. A prior opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reported in 123 Fed. (2d) 215. For the convenience of the Court, a supplemental list of cases involving the same parties in the same dispute is added to the general table of cases, tax books, statutes, supra.

Jurisdiction.

This Court has jurisdiction by virtue of the provisions of Section 240 (a) of the Judicial Code as amended February 13, 1925, and upon Section 10 (e) and (f) of the National Labor Relations Act.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, appellee herein (intervener below), is an unincorporated organization of all employees, other than those having supervisory powers or an official position (I 135, 191) of the Donnelly Garment Company and the Donnelly Garment Sales Company, located in Kansas City, Missouri. It was organized on April 27, 1937, and on May 27, 1937, executed a contract with the employers for a term of two years, which has since been renewed and is in effective operation at this date. In addition, a Supplemental Wage Agreement, entered into between this union and the employers, is also in effect.

The Donnelly Garment Company is a corporation engaged exclusively in the manufacture of ladies' garments, which are marketed through the Donnelly Garment Sales Company, a corporation, the operation of both companies being in and directly related to interstate commerce.

The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union was the original complainant in this proceeding before the National Labor Relations Board.

For purposes of brevity, we shall refer to the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union as the "DGWU," the Donnelly Garment Company and Donnelly Garment Sales Company collectively as "The Company," the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union as "The International," and the National Labor Relations Board as "The Board."

This action was started on April 6, 1939, two years after DGWU was organized, through the filing of the original complaint against the Company by the acting regional director for the Seventeenth Region of the Board. On April 27, 1939, the original complaint was withdrawn and an amended charge was filed alleging that the Company had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting interstate commerce. A copy of the complaint, the amended charge, and notice of hearing were served on the DGWU, as party to the contract. The DGWU, upon permission of the acting regional director, intervened in the action and thereafter filed its motion to make the complaint and charge more definite and certain, its answer, and its application for the Board to hold an election (A 409, 560; X 3844) to determine the choice of the employees as to their bargaining agent.

Other less formal requests by the DGWU for the Board to hold such an election had preceded this formal application and others have followed it, none of which has been granted. (I 242-3, IV 1336qqq, XI 3965).

Hearing on this original complaint was held before Trial Examiner Batten, who sustained the allegations of the complaint and was sustained by the Board in refusing to receive or consider as material the testimony of any employee and the proffered testimony of every employee as to their reasons and motives in forming the DGWU and their freedom from interference in doing so. The findings and opinion of the Board were reviewed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in November, 1941. The opinion and decision of that court (123 F. (2d) 215) was that the testimony of employees should have been received and weighed by the Labor Board and the case was sent back to the Board for further hearing with instructions:

> "To accord to the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the trial examiner; and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order." (l. c. 225.)

The hearing under this mandate was heard by Trial Examiner Batten on various days in July, August and September of 1942. In this hearing the DGWU was permitted to put on not a single witness in its case-in-chief (IX 3255), having the opportunity only in surrebuttal to submit the testimony of six of the employees as to specific matters already before the court, but which did not include matters on which the Circuit Court of Appeals directed that evidence be taken (IX 3763, 3766, 3768, 3772, 3774, 3776). The Company was permitted to introduce in its case-in-chief the testimony of the president of the Donnelly Companies, Mrs. Reed (who was ill at the time of the prior hearing), and a few other witnesses. The ruling of the Trial Examiner, and the Board (which is the ruling considered and reviewed by the court below), was to the effect that the employees of the Donnelly Companies had not exercised their free will and choice in the selection of their union. This ruling was made without the Trial Examiner's permitting the testimony of the employees to go into the record to the effect that the DGWU was and still is the union of their free will and choice. The fact that the DGWU was the free will choice of the employees, and that they were not coerced in any way by the Company, is supported by the testimony of every employee who testified on this point for DGWU[1], for the Company[2], and for the Board (these employees were actually witnesses for DGWU although examined first by the Board), and by the testimony of seven ex-employees who testified on behalf of the Board[3], except two: one of whom admitted perjury[4] and the other's testimony to this point was conflicting.[5]. The International's witnesses testified only as to collateral matters. The affidavit of every one of the 1160 employees that they chose the DGWU without any interference or coercion is also in the record[6]. Also on behalf of the DGWU, was an offer of testimony of every employee to the same effect[7].

(1) II 704, 715 & 718a-b, 718l, 718r & 718u; (second hearing) 3765, 3769, 3773, 3775.

(2) II 405-410, 561, 612, 655, 664, 662, 672, 675; (second hearing) VIII 2566, 2632, 2722, 2772, 2858, 2914, IX 3006, 3049-3050, 3078, 3140, 3187; X 3726, 3735, 3739, 3743, 3756.

(3) I 488, II 355; (second hearing) IX 3462-3463, X 3492 & 3501, X 3581.

The DGWU and the Company petitioned the Circuit Court of Appeals to review and to set aside that order of the Board. In the opinion of the Court, reported at 151 F. (2d) 854, it was held:

> "Our conclusion is that the Company and the plant union have not yet had the full and fair trial to which they are constitutionally entitled." (l. c. 875.)

and the Court further held:

> "The prayer of the Board for a decree of this Court enforcing the order under review is denied for want of due process in the proceedings upon which the order is based." (l. c. 875.)

From that decision the Board and the International petitioned this Court for Writs of Certiorari, and the case is now before this Court upon writs granted to petitioners on April 22, 1946.

(4) May Stevens testified that she committed perjury when she signed the affidavit that she joined of her free will (X 3690, 3703).

(5) Etta Dorsey who was shown to have had her memory refreshed by Board (IX 3369) and International (IX 3390) representatives five years after the happenings, and who testified that she quit her job because she was mad at a co-employee (IX 3364-5), and that she was still mad at her (IX 3365). On cross-examination she testified "Q. Was the affidavit at the time you signed and swore to it true or false so far as you are concerned? A. True." (IX 3380.)

(6) VI 1677 to 1749.

(7) I 355, II 613, II 718b, III 743 (offer of proof), VI 1675, IX 3270, X 3783.

There has been considerable litigation concerning issues related to this case. The citations to the officially reported cases are shown in the table of "Donnelly" cases supra; two others are in the record. (NRA and Judge Miller injunction.)

In 1935, four years prior to the filing of this action, there was a hearing on a complaint against the Company under the labor provisions of the National Recovery Act. Before the hearing on this complaint was completed the Supreme Court invalidated that Act. In the first NLRB hearing, portions of the record from the NRA hearing were offered in evidence by the NLRB attorney, and admitted by the Trial Examiner. (III 1110a-c.)

In July, 1937, the DGWU and the Company petitioned the U. S. District Court for a restraining order directed to the International, and upon the facts then presented, the Court granted a temporary restraining order. In December, 1937, a 3-Judge Court issued a permanent injunction against the International. In June, 1939 (two months after the original NLRB complaint was filed), there was a further hearing in the injunction action before Judge Miller, resulting in the issuance of a restraining order against the International. Portions of the hearing before Judge Miller are in the record in this case (IV 1336B; V 1365; V 1374c-1376).

The facts surrounding the organization of the DGWU and the attempts of the Board and the International to discredit its formation and operation are set forth below. Their variances from the statement of facts set forth by the Board is largely explained by the fact that the Board relies heavily on its own findings rather than on testimony. Actually it uses "The facts as found by the Board" as its concise statement of the facts in the case (p. 12) and completely fails in furnishing this Court with > "A concise statement of the case containing all that is material to the consideration of the questions presented, with appropriate page references to the printed record." Supreme Court Rule—No. 27 (d), 83 Law Ed. 1646.

Its citation to the record turns out to be a citation to the findings of the Board no fewer than 225 times, and frequently to such findings wholly unsupported (36 times). As the Court of Appeals has twice pointed out (123 F. (2d) 215, l. c. 225 and 151 Fed. 854, l. c. 875), these findings were reached by excluding from consideration the testimony of all the employees as to how and why they formed the DGWU and as to their complete freedom from coercion or interference in doing so, by repeatedly declaring it to be immaterial and thereby not putting it in the scales at all to be weighed against what the Board considers legitimate inferences from subsidiary facts. Clearly, findings reached in this manner are wholly without probative force. The Board finds subsidiary facts on testimony overwhelmingly denied, cites them as established and repeats the citations many times, basing its findings on arbitrary inferences therefrom.

An example of this is the Board's statement in its brief (pp. 12 and 13): "Through two of its management representatives, Todd and Atherton, the Company hired an attorney to advise its employees in opposing the ILGWU (X, 3872)." This statement is not the fact. The testimony on this point, without any exception, is that the employees, acting for themselves only, hired a firm of attorneys to provide them with legal assistance by way of injunction or whatever legal steps might be available to protect themselves (the employees) from violence which the International was inflicting upon employees of nearby garment factories and was then threatening against Donnelly employees, and that then and at all times thereafter every legal expense by way of attorneys' fees and otherwise was paid by the employees only (X, 3661, Mrs. Keyes, an ex-employee, a Board witness, and at the time in question in charge of company finances; II, 558; IX, 3193; II, 557, 718v; I, 178; II, 587, 588; IX, 3083; I, 216, 238, 230; II, 430, 624, 718r; II, 572, 692; IX, 3231).

The sole and only citation in support of the Board's statement in its brief at page 12 is to its own finding (X, 3872), and even this does not so find. The allegations of the finding are that Rose Todd, "a representative of the respondent," and Hobart Atherton, "an officer of the League and a supervisor," and Sally Ormsby, after a meeting of the employees at which they were appointed a committee by such employees, employed Mr. Tyler and that the subject of employment was solely the possibility of an injunction protecting the employees from International violence. The statement that the Company hired an attorney is without foundation and the implication that it was for the purpose of preventing the employees from having a free opportunity to join the International is not even supported by the citation to the Board's finding.

Farther on in its brief, page 53, the Board recites that three employees employed an attorney to advise the employees in opposing the ILGWU. Besides its own finding, it cites testimony of Rose Todd that the Loyalty League is purely a social organization and that affiant was president of it; that when the employees employed attorneys on March 27, the sole thing they had in mind was an injunction or protection against violence and there had never been any talk about forming a union until about a month later (I, 38-39, 176); and the testimony of Mr. Atherton that Mrs. Reed had nothing to do with the calling of the meeting and that a few employees took it upon themselves to call on a firm of attorneys to see what they could do in the way of obtaining protection and that they talked to Mr. Gossett and Mr. Tyler, who asked them if they represented all the employees and who asked for a retainer (II, 555-556), and again the testimony of Mr. Atherton to the effect that after several conferences with the attorney and after the Wagner Act had been declared constitutional, he suggested that "it might be a good thing if we could organize our own independent union" and that arrangements for the organizational meeting were made with the owner of the building on a floor not leased from the Donnelly Company and without taking the matter up with the Donnelly Company at all (II 558-559). The use of such evidence as this to support the former claim that the Company hired or paid an attorney for the employees or even the later inference that the attorney was employed to oppose the freedom of employees to join the International when the citations are either not on the subject at all or flatly contradict what they are cited to establish, is astounding.

The International's statement of this situation is that "three employees including Miss Todd employed an attorney, Mr. Frank Tyler. They paid him a retainer fee of $500.00, as they stated, to bring some sort of an injunction suit against the International." The International then states (its brief, page 17) that "no such injunction suit was ever filed but the $500.00 was kept by Mr. Tyler and applied by him on his fee for his help in organizing the plant union." As a matter of fact, the DGWU did prosecute an injunction suit, together with the Company, in the federal courts through two trials. In any case, any group of employees was entitled to employ attorneys to investigate and advise them as to the chances of an injunction giving them the needed protection, and all of the money so used came from the employees, part of it having been borrowed from a bank and later repaid.

The Board frequently recites findings, inferences or conclusions as though they were established and even admitted facts which are supported by insignificant and discredited evidence or by no evidence whatever. We shall point out a substantial number of examples in the argument under the point of lack of substantial evidence, although we are under some handicap in doing justice to this subject since the Board's brief, due on September 24, was not served on us until September 30. No explanation of the delay has been offered up to the time this goes to print. In order to substantially comply with the rules, our own brief will have to be in the hands of the printer by the evening of October 3.

The International entered the labor market in Kansas City in the spring of 1937 for the avowed purpose of becoming the bargaining agent in that area for all employees engaged in making ladies' garments (X 3677), with special emphasis on the Donnelly Company (IV 1336g, 1336vvv; V 1549). Similar campaigns had already been waged in other cities in this area, viz: Dallas, fall of 1935 (V 1527); Memphis, spring of 1937 (V 1411-1421); St. Louis, spring of 1935 (V 1529-32). The operations of the International in its drive for members were characterized by many successive days of force and violence, and were concentrated against employees of garment companies within the radius of five or six blocks of the Donnelly Company (II 718y, VI 1336x, 1336rrr-sss, XI 4125-4171; see also Donnelly injunction cases, listed in table, supra). Not only did many Donnelly employees see this unlawful violence, but it was featured in several news stories in the newspapers (IV 1236-1241, 1257-1275, XI 4125-4165, 4173-75). The Company has around 1,200 employees, mostly girls and women, and to these employees the brutality and intimidations and utter disregard for the person and rights of the employees at the Missouri Gordon, Gernes Garment Companies were not mere incidents but were driving forces to seek self-preservation in their own union. For over a month, from March 15 to April 17, 1937, these disorders continued, and the workers at these three plants were beaten, kicked, knocked down and their clothes torn with systematic bratality in the effort of the International to organize them into locals. Representatives and pickets of the International frequently stated that this procedure was a mere curtain raiser to what would be done to the Donnelly workers to induce them to join the International (II 718z).

In fact, the testimony of Mr Perlstein, Southwest District Manager of the International (V 1510-1511), was as follows:

> "By Mr. Tyler:
>
> Q. Mr. Perlstein, if I correctly understood you this morning, you do not admit that the methods used by the International at the Gordon, Gernes and Missouri Companies were illegal, is that correct? A. That is correct.
>
> Q. And I believe you stated yesterday that you never give up, didn't you? A. Yes.
>
> Q. Then we may reasonably expect that these same methods used by the International at the Gordon, Gernes and Missouri strike, whatever they were, will be continued down at the Donnelly plant unless this court grants a permanent injunction, is that true? A. Yes."

The tactics used in this preliminary organization of the smaller plants directly motivated the members of the DGWU to join together for their own protection. See the testimony of members of the union, which is in the record (IV 1336g, 1336hh, 1336mm-nn, 1336ww, 1336uuu, IX 3005d, 3013, 3047, 3171), and also that of two witnesses for the Board, Copenhaver and Weilert (X 3514, 3581), and the offer of proof in which 1,160 employees offer to so testify (III 743, IX 3270).

On March 18, 1937, a meeting of the employees was called by some of the employees (VIII 2626, 2851, 2920) to consider what might be done to protect themselves from similar violences when the International moved its attack a few blocks closer to the Donnelly plant (VIII 2569-70). This meeting was held after working hours (VIII 2569, 2923), and offer of proof (III 743, IX 3270).

They had ample reason to hold this meeting. During the course of the meeting, which was organized and attended solely by employees, Mrs. Koll suggested that Mrs. Reed, president of the Donnelly Garment Company, who was in the building, should be invited to come to the meeting (II 719, IX 3125), which was held in a room on the second floor of the same building which housed the Company, but not leased or controlled by the Company (A 575, note 4D). A messenger from the meeting went to Mrs. Reed's office and asked her to come down to the meeting place, which she did (I 45). At the meeting she made a talk to the employees in which she said she would not permit Dubinsky to force her employees to join anything they did not wish to join, but in which there was no trace of any effort to control their choice as to labor union affiliations (VIII 2627) and no effort to direct their actions as to whether they should or should not unionize.

On March 27, 1937, three employees of the Company (II 556), after informal consultation with many other employees (II 555), decided that they would consult attorneys to find out what they could do or what they were entitled to do, what they could get in the way of protection (II 556) against the violence threatening to move over from the smaller plants eight blocks away. These employees called on Mr. Gossett of the firm of Gossett, Ellis, Dietrich and Tyler (I 63). At that conference the possibility of an injunction suit in either the state or federal courts was considered. Mr. Tyler questioned them as to whom they represented and they stated they represented the employees of the Company (II 556). It was agreed that the attorneys would investigate the legal situation and that the employees would pay a retainer. There were numerous conferences between representatives of the employees and the attorneys.

On April 12, 1937, the newspapers carried front page headlines announcing the decision of the Jones-Laughlin case by this Court, sustaining the National Labor Relations Act (I 61, XI 4177). This decision was discussed by the Donnelly employees among themselves and it directed their attention to the fact that this Act established not only the right of the employees to organize themselves and deal collectively with their employer, but also to the fact that 51 per cent or more of them had the right to deal for all employees and that such organization and such contracts were entitled to receive the special protection of the National Labor Relations Board (VIII 2577, 2857). Shortly thereafter suggestions were made that the

(8) Testimony of Hazel Saucke:

"Q. What effect did this article (on the Wagner Act) have on your mind, with reference to the question of forming a union of employees of the Donnelly Company? A. Well, it gave me confidence that we had the right to go ahead and form a union of our own liking rather than have to join the International Union." (VIII 2641.)

Testimony of Marjorie Green:

"• • • Mr. Tyler, who we had previously hired as our attorney, was there and he would explain to us what we could do in the way of protection, and Mr. Tyler did talk to us and he explained that since the Wagner Act had become constitutional that we were legally entitled to form our own employees' union; that it was just as legal and just as valid as any other labor union and he was not trying to force us to do anything against our wishes but he believed we would get the protection we needed in this way, and he thought we could handle our own collective bargaining for ourselves through our representative and it would give us the protection that we wanted." (V 1362d-1363.)

employees might greatly strengthen their position by organizing their own labor union (II 559).

Ten days later, on April 22, the Donnelly workers were startled to learn from a newspaper article that one of their co-workers, Sylvia Hull, was to be a delegate from "Donnelly Workers' Local" to the International's convention at Atlantic City (I 254, II 558, V 1513, IX 3012, 3088, XI 4171). The existence of a "Donnelly Workers' Local" was a surprise to all of the 1,300 employees except the one chosen as delegate and perhaps one other (IV 1338, V 1563), for the Donnelly garment workers knew of no meeting at which a "Local" of the International had been organized or had received their authorization to act for them, and certainly of no meeting at which they authorized anyone to represent them at that convention (I 97, IV 1336nnn). There was a demonstration of protest and resentment at Sylvia Hull's attempt to represent them and to convey to the public that the Donnelly workers were a part of the International (IX 3089).

There were repeated statements in speeches and newspapers emanating from Mr. Dubinsky, who was the president and secretary-treasurer of the International (II 378hh), and from Mr. Perlstein, to the effect that the International was going to organize the Donnelly employees; and the district manager went so far as to promise in an interview published in the Kansas City Times on February 26, 1937, that there would be a countrywide boycott of the product which the Donnelly garment workers made (V 1497-1498, IX 3132).

On April 27, 1937, an organization meeting was called by the employees themselves outside of working hours and at that meeting the Donnelly Garment Workers Union came into being (VIII 2565, 2915; IX 3005, 3077, 3121, 3171). Although the meeting was held in a room in the same building where the employees worked, this room and the floor containing it were not owned, leased or under the control or supervision of the Company (II 382, 559; IV 1229, VI 1336h, VIII 2917, X n41, 3872).

On May 27, 1937, the executive committee, selected at this organization meeting, after substantial consideration[9] (I 213) notified the Company that it desired to present a collective bargaining contract to the employers. This contract was presented by the committee to Mrs. Reed, who had with her the heads of some of the departments and Mr. Ingraham, an attorney for the Company (VII 2096-2097, 2112). These original articles of agreements are in evidence (III 807). Negotiations lasted all day and concessions were made by both sides (II 704j, 704o).

This first contract provided for a minimum wage of $15.00 per week for all workers, including bundle boys, etc.; a 40-hour week with excess treated as overtime; promotion and seniority rights; a closed shop after June 5, 1937; arbitration of difficulties; extension of vacation privileges and the recognition of the right of the individual who may be chosen as a chairman of the union to spend the necessary time in union affairs and to continue his or her employment with the Company at the proportionate rate of pay theretofore received from the Company for the time given to union affairs. The contract was to continue for two years and consistently has been renewed, with some changes.

---

(9) Testimony of Hobart Atherton:

"The executive committee of the union immediately got to work upon drafting a working agreement, or a contract, which we wanted to negotiate with the Donnelly Garment Company and the Donnelly Garment Sales Company.

After numerous conferences among ourselves, and with Mr. Tyler, we finally worked out a draft of what we wanted and asked the Company Officials for a meeting at which we wanted to present this contract to them." (II 562.)

There have been wage agreements in the form of supplemental contracts. The first, dated June 22, 1937 (III 812) was agreed upon between the parties after substantial consideration [10] (VII 3381). In this contract the basic minimum wage was raised to $16.50 and the minimum wages for specific classes of workers were raised in several instances. Minimums were guaranteed to the employees for the life of the contract and the length of vacations on pay was increased. The benefits of the contract to the employees are repeated at various points in the testimony by various witnesses (II 580; VII 2380).

The DGWU was recognized by the court as representative of the Donnelly employees and was permitted to intervene in an injunction suit filed by the Company. A three-judge U. S. District Court awarded a temporary injunction against violence, fraud, secondary boycott and interference with the contract existing between the Company and the DGWU (21 Fed. Supp. 807). Even the one dissenting judge in the final paragraph of his opinion (l. c. 831) said, "An overwhelming showing justifying an injunction under the law as it was certainly has been made." The findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the decree of the court in issuing the permanent injunction are made a part of this record (V 1616a, 1616h, 1616k).

(10) "Q. Mr. Atherton, what, if anything, was done in preparation by the committee of the union for determining what wages they would ask in the wage agreement?

"A. The Company was asked to give certain data as to wages and salaries paid different classifications of employees. And those were furnished to us. They were discussed at much length, living conditions, cost of living—by that I mean the cost of housing, food, clothing, and so on. All of those things were discussed between us as to arriving at what demands we would make in the way of minimum wages.

"Q. Did you make any investigation of what wages were being paid in other garment plants in this locality?

"A. We did, to a certain extent, inasmuch as we received information from individuals as to what they were getting, and we had been told what wages were being paid under the ILGWU contracts in other shops in Kansas City." (II 579.)

Since its organization the DGWU has functioned continuously and effectively. Meetings are held after working hours in a room which is used by the Company for style shows during the year and for the use of which room the DGWU pays rent to the Company (IV 1336l; I 227). The Executive Committee, now in its tenth or eleventh personnel, meets about twice each month; it has dealt with a great many complaints of individuals or groups and has secured satisfactory action on many of them from the employer (I 114, 231-233, 234-238a). We submit that no one can read the minute book and the history of the union and go over its treasurer's record without coming to the conclusion that here is the genuine expression of the will and choice of at least the overwhelming majority of the employees if not absolutely 100% of them. People do not continue to attend meetings with undiminished enthusiasm and carry on such organization year after year on their own initiative unless the organization has their genuine support. They are not subject to a fine for non-attendance.

As has been previously stated, the hearing before the Board was started in 1939, approximately two years after the first contract was signed by the DGWU with the Company. The Board called the first witness at this hearing (I 13) and this witness was not one for the Board but was the chief witness for the DGWU and the Company. The Board's attorney proceeded to examine her, not as a direct witness, but by methods usually associated with cross-examination. The examiner vigorously assisted (I 15, 18, 20, 24, 53, 63-68, 86, 87-89, 90, 92-93, 94, 96, 113, 123-124, 138, 151, 160a, 165, 185, 197). This continued for four days.

In the course of the first hearing, there was a suggestion by the attorney for the International that the evidence would show financial support of the union by the employer and payment of the attorneys for the union by the employer. After six weeks spent almost entirely in cross-examination of the members of the union or officers of the Company (for the Board put on nothing which could be called a case of its own), no shred of such evidence developed. But these same witnesses testified to the direct opposite—that all expenses were borne by the union (for example, see: II 695; VI 1336k; IX 3231; X 3677, 3768). After employing attorneys, Miss Todd borrowed one thousand dollars from the First National Bank because the attorneys had stated to her that if the employees were actually in earnest they would be able to pay a respectable retainer fee, and she believed it was desirable to pay them promptly as evidence of good faith and used this means to do so, even before collections from the various employees were completed (II 557, 718v). A 50-cent contribution by each employee was voted about the end of March, 1937, and collected by various employees in the departments in which they were individually employed (II 587, 588; IX 3083). The Board's finding that no such meeting occurred is discussed hereinafter. The loan was repaid by the employees. The president of the bank referred to Miss Todd as a sort of handy man for the Company but stated that he never considered her as representing the Company and that neither she nor anyone else ever intimated to him that she represented the Company. He understood she represented the employees only (II 718v, 718x).

A great deal of time was spent by the attorney for the International and the attorney for the Board examining witnesses regarding the payment of rent to the Kansas City Chair Company for chairs used at union meetings. It developed that there were a few meetings at which no chairs were rented and those present remained standing (II 694), but the testimony of the treasurer and others, with no disputing evidence whatever, was that the union itself had paid the rent for chairs at every meeting at which they had been used. Out of some 20 or 30 meetings a few receipted bills for the chair rental had been lost, but the evidence of the DGWU's officers (II 693) was positive that rental for any chairs used at a union meeting had always been paid for by the employees out of Union funds and not by the Company. With an evident feeling of triumph at having finally discovered something, the attorneys for the Board and the International produced an official of the Kansas City Chair Company, who testified that chairs for the union and chairs for the Company itself had been carried for some time in one account under the heading of "Donnelly Garment Company" (I 334w). But this official also testified that the Chair Company had no system of bookkeeping worthy of the name at the time these entries were made in 1936, and that the accounts might well have been carried as they were as a matter of convenience (I 334x). Since the chairs all went to the same building and to an organization, the first name of which was "Donnelly," it is perfectly natural for the party taking orders at the Chair Company to enter them under one heading. Absolutely no one testified that the employer paid any of this rental or that the union did not pay all of it, and there is even no inference worthy of the name that such was not the case.

There was evidence that the employees without the consent of the Company had used typewriters or ditto machines of the Company after hours for union work; it being hoped, probably, that the inference would be drawn that it was with the consent of the employer after all and that it might thereby establish such domination as wo destroy the validity of the union (I 59-62a). There was also testimony that the chairman of the union had used a filing cabinet belonging to the Company for the depositing of certain documents connected with the union, although the filing cabinet used for membership cards had been purchased by the union itself. This filing cabinet had stood in its place for a number of years, was not then in use, and the chairman of the executive committee of the union merely put certain union documents in it because it was convenient, without asking or receiving the consent or permission of anybody (I 35-36, 217). The treasurer's accounts show disbursements every month of the existence of the union, the disbursements running into a large amount of money and covering every proper need of the union from prizes at its parties to the printing of briefs, the payment of attorneys, and the payment of witnesses for time lost while attending trials. These records cannot fail to convince that they show organization and support of the union by the employees themselves (I 216, 228-230; II 430, 624, 718r).

Employees who were members of the executive committee of the union have been late some twenty minutes or so in returning to work after noon meetings of that committee without being docked and it is equally true that employees have been late in similar amounts of time in returning from the dentist or some personal errand without being docked. Instructors deh er work to employees and show beginners how to operate machines but have no supervisory power (IX 3122, 3195, 3206, III 743), and no more authority to report an employee than any other employee has and frequently receive less pay than operators (I 300-361, II 450-451). The price fixing committee has always had representatives of the DGWU on it, beginning with Rose Todd who had no supervisory power, and who are selected by the union (I 112-114). The Board found that Rose Todd had no well defined duties and in the same paragraph found that her definite duties were:

> "During this period she was not assigned to any particular department, being directly responsible to Baty, the factory manager. Todd was assigned a desk in the factory—first on the ninth floor and later on the seventh floor—charged with the responsibility of keeping the various sections supplied with the necessary materials for maintaining operations and checking up on the delivery of various supplies that should be in the sections. In addition, if any of the sections were short of supplies which delayed the work, Todd was notified and arranged for the proper supplies to be forwarded to the department. These duties required that Todd move throughout the various sections of the factory and contact instructors and thread girls. For a period of 1938 Todd again worked with Dewey Atcheson on some special work." (X 3855-6.)

The action of the price fixing committee is not final and other representatives of the union have taken up complaints, including prices, with the management many times and have often been successful (I 114, 231-233, 234-238a; II 628; VII 2159-2164).

The Board has steadfastly refused to hold an election of the employees on the question of their free will choice of labor unions (I 242; IV 1336qqq; XI 3965).

The Board paid much attention to an organization called the "Donnelly Loyalty League" or the "Nelly Don Loyalty League." It was organized in February, 1935, by the employees for the purpose of resisting the spread of certain false statements about conditions of employment in the Donnelly plant and for the purpose of social intercourse between employees (I 37, 38, 42; VIII 2582, 2666, 2718, 2727, 2778, 2860, 2927; IX 3011, 3052, 3090). It never undertook to be a labor union, to make any contracts with employers, and the fact that it did express resentment against statements repeatedly found to have been false cannot make a labor union out of it. The Board asserts that the DGWU is the League's successor, but absolutely fails to produce any evidence whatever to support such claim. The employees testified that it was not (II 704j; IX 3130, 3362). In the first place, the Loyalty League is still alive today and it has no successor (I 186-187; II 584a; VIII 2731); in the second place, the conclusion after reading the evidence cannot be avoided the DGWU would have been organized under the circumstances whether any Loyalty League existed or not. There are other social organizations among employees of the plant such as an Athletic Club (I 36), "The Pioneers" (II 409), etc., and it would be as reasonable to say that any one of them was the predecessor of the union. It is true that the one-time chairman of the executive committee of the union was also at one time president of the Loyalty League, which is a normal result of the qualities of leadership in any group. The employees did not consider her, nor the others so charged by the Board, as representative of the management (VIII 2593, 2644, 2726, 2812, 2859, 2872, 2929; IX 3058, 3092, 3122, 3195, 3208, 3218, and offer of proof, III 743, et seq.) It is also true that when attorneys were first employed by the employees to investigate the possibilities of injunction the first payment of retainer was made by check drawn on the Loyalty League solely as a matter of convenience, there being no bank account of employee funds other than this (I 178). But from the moment the possibility of forming a labor union was conceived of, the union proceeded on its own initiative through its own organization and raised every dime of its expenses by dues from its own members, profits from entertainments given by itself and at its own expense (I 230; II 572, 692; IX 3232). As a matter of fact, the Loyalty League itself was the spontaneous expression of the genuine sentiment of the employees. One ex-employee (thereafter shown beyond any possible doubt to have been biased and completely and thoroughly discredited), in the first hearing offered the only testimony to the contrary which, even if true, would be no more than inference to that effect. This was Mrs. Greenhaw (brought by the Board from Portland, Indiana), who testified that there was a meeting of both the DGWU and the Loyalty League on May 25, 1937, and this was contradicted by every witness for the Company and the DGWU who was questioned on the subject. The statement was denied by Mr. McConaughey (II 704a), Mr. Crawford (III 722), Miss Green (II 718), Mrs. Weigand (II 718m-n), and many others.

One of the attorneys for the International has been quoted as stating in reference to ascertaining the choice of the employees as to a labor union, "I don't care about their choice" (V 1402). He does not agree that this is a correct quotation (V 1382), but states that he did say something to this effect, "I can conceive it is very reasonable to me that a large majority wouldn't want to join the International. I'm not asking that you put them in there. I believe sincerely that a large majority of your people don't want it," but he suggests the reason is because of their intimidation and campaign of vilification. This fits into the unavoidable picture of the entire proceedings that our opponents have realized that the actual determination at this time or at any time in the past of the free will choice of the employees would be and is overwhelmingly in favor of the DGWU, and against them.

The significant and important evidence in the first hearing was the testimony of every employee who took the stand (eight called by the DGWU and fourteen by the Company) that they formed the DGWU of their own choice and without any interference or coercion or suggestion from the employer. They gave their reasons for preferring their own union and for forming and operating it, which frequently included dislike of the violence used by the International at nearby plants and often threatened against Donnelly employees when the little plants had been whipped into line (IV 1336g, 1336vv-ww, 1336vvv; IX 3013; X 3514). Many thought the formation of their own union would not only afford protection against violence but prevent repetition of the incident in which one employee (Sylvia Hull), representing herself and only one other employee (V 1563), had attended an International convention on the pretense of representing a "Donnelly Local," and made a speech written for her by Mr. Perlstein, regional director for the International (V 1569). Rose Todd testified: "I mean the thing that prompted us to get busy and form a union of our own is the thing Sylvia Hull did" (I 254; see also I 96-97). Subsequent evidence has proven that those who believed that formation of their own union would give them protection were correct. The employees' union appeared in the injunction case against the International.

In addition to the employees who took the stand, the DGWU and the Company offered in good faith to put every one of the 1,160 employees on the witness stand who would testify to their desire to belong to the DGWU, their reasons therefor and to complete lack of interference or pressure from the Company. When this offer was refused by the examiner the affidavits of all of such 1,160 employees to this effect were offered in evidence and refused and are in the record (VI 1677 to 1749; IX 3270).

No DGWU or Company witness who signed this affidavit has ever been impeached or shown to have committed perjury, nor to lack enough intelligence to know his choice between two unions and none has ever retracted over a period of some nine years with the exception of one ex-employee, a witness for the Board who several years thereafter and at the second hearing testified that she joined the International the same day she signed this affidavit, that she acted as a spy for it by reporting employee activities to the end that she committed perjury when she signed such affidavit (X 3696). She was not permitted to answer a question as to whether her husband was an organizer for the International (X 3683-4).

The second hearing of this case before the examiner for the Labor Board again took several weeks' time in the months of July, August and September of 1942. It was heard by the same examiner over the protest of the DGWU and the Company on the grounds of his prejudice (VII 2059-2063).

Its purpose as stated by the Circuit Court of Appeals (123 Fed. (2d) 215) was to take and consider the testimony of the employees as to their choice and why and how they formed the plant union. Every employee who testified reaffirmed his free choice of DGWU, gave persuasive reasons therefor and denied any interference or coercion. Again, both the DGWU and the Company offered in good faith to put every employee of the Company on the witness stand for testimony to the same effect and to prove no coercion and "to prove the successful operation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union since July 15, 1939" (IX 3270, 3265, 3253). Again the affidavits of all employees below the rank of supervisor as offered in the first hearing (VI 1675) were offered in evidence (IX 3270; X 3783). The examiner would not permit the DGWU to put on any witnesses whatever in its case-in-chief (IX 3255) and allowed DGWU six witnesses on surrebuttal (X 3763) on strictly limited details and not on the points of evidence which it had been directed to take by the appellate court.

In the second hearing the Labor Board put on six witnesses of its own. All of them were ex-employees. At no time has any employee testified in favor of the Board's contention in any hearing or lawsuit. Of the six ex-employees whom the Board put on the stand in the second hearing, one testified that she knew nothing whatever about labor relations in the plant, but that she believed it to be true that nobody connected with the management ever urged or tried to induce any employee to stay out of the International or to join the plant union (X 3660). Three readily agreed that the plant union was the voluntary preference of the great majority of the workers and that one of the primary causes of its formation was the desire to protect the members from threatened violence of the International (IX 3455 and 3463; X 3514, 3581). This was exactly the fact that they were placed on the stand for the purpose of disproving. One stated that she was not forced or threatened in any way in joining the DGWU (X 3501) but she did have a feeling that if she did not sign she might not have a job, but she explained this by saying that if the DGWU secured a closed shop contract she would then have to belong in order to have a job which, of course, means that if there was any coercion it was by the law itself (X 3529). One stated that when she signed an affidavit that she preferred the DGWU, she committed perjury (X 3690, 3703 and footnote 4, supra); that on the same day she joined she notified the International, and that she acted for the International in getting information about the DGWU (X 3696, 3708). The substance of the testimony of these Board witnesses is as to their personal grievances against either the Company or the plant union, but it recognizes and supports the universal testimony of the employees that so far as the DGWU's being the voluntary, actual free will choice of the overwhelming majority of the employees, no doubt whatever exists. The testimony of these employees is discussed in more detail with citations in the argument. Thus two long hearings by the Labor Board and two substantial hearings of injunction cases by federal courts have repeatedly produced the sworn statements of all employees as to the fact of their actual choice and the reasons therefor, which testimony is actually supported on this fact by the witnesses produced by the Board for the purpose of contradicting it.

The Circuit Court of Appeals on the first hearing from the Board pointed out that the persons who formed an organization must know why they did it and that there was no presumption that they would commit perjury:

> "It was not shown that any of the employees of the Donnelly Company, whose testimony was offered, was under any disqualifying disability. There was no presumption that these employees would commit perjury, and, even if the trial examiner believed they would perjure themselves, that would not have affected the admissibility of their evidence" (123 F. (2d) 222) and directed that the Board receive and consider this evidence as material regardless of how much weight the Board gave to it.

On the second hearing the examiner and the Board not only refused to receive any testimony whatever from the DGWU upon its case-in-chief and received no more than eleven employees called by the Company, but again refused to consider the testimony of every employee in the plant as to why she or he joined in forming or supporting the DGWU and whether she or he was in any way coerced or interfered with. It again held that all such evidence was wholly immaterial to the issue of why and how the union was formed and whether the employees preferred it as their choice. The entire opinion of the Board demonstrated that no consideration whatever was given to the extraordinary amount of the testimony of the employees and the complete lack of any contradiction of it, but we need not rely on this evidence to show that the Board again flatly refused to consider such evidence as material, in spite of the Court of Appeals' direction to that effect, by its own unequivocal declaration to that effect:

> "Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily designated the DGWU, we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of that act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case." (Italics ours.) (A 619.)

We shall maintain that this evidence is material and is not discredited by the use of mere inference which is the Board's only method of establishing its falsity; and that a decision of the Board, which refuses to treat it as worthy of any consideration whatever in spite of directions from the supervising court to do so, cannot stand.

Our problem is whether the purpose of the Act is to be achieved by recognizing that proven choice, or whether the Act, by regarding inferences or secondary evidence as ends in themselves, can be made to work backward, so to speak, and produce the exact opposite of its purpose.

We shall not urge that the Board need hear the testimony of every employee. As the Court of Appeals pointed out, there are well-known expedients to substitute a reasonable cross-section of a large group of witnesses for all of them:

> "There is available to him (the examiner) well-known expedients for limiting the number of witnesses where their testimony was cumulative" (123 F. (2d), l. c. 222), nor shall we assert that the Board can be told how much weight it should give to any material evidence. But we shall earnestly submit that when the supervisory court, acting in accord with its powers and within its discretion, directs that certain important evidence be treated as material, the Board cannot explicitly refuse to follow such direction by saying that it "* * * is impelled to adhere to the opinion * * * that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial * * *." We shall urge that the testimony of every employee in the plant to a fact within his own knowledge, without impeachment, plus majority of the six ex-employees offered by the Board who recite personal grievances but agree that the overwhelming majority of employees prefer the DGWU was correctly held by the Court of Appeals to be material and that the Board cannot refuse to consider such evidence and base a contrary decision wholly on inference. We believe that the Board cannot lawfully presume that every employee in the plant is a perjurer and has so continued in different hearings over a period of years without having at least some evidence for such an outrageous conclusion.

Nor can it presume that these employees do not have enough intelligence to know why they formed their own union or what their actual choice is.

Twice the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit has held that the Board has not yet received and considered all of the competent and material evidence (123 F. (2d), l. c. 225, 151 F. (2d), l. c. 875). The Board has unequivocally recorded its refusal to do so.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT AND QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

(1) All of the employees, numbering some 1,100, were offered as witnesses that the plant union was the free will choice of the employees and to give their reasons for forming and operating it and that they were in nowise interfered with or dominated by their employer in so doing; at least four of the seven ex-employees offered by the Board in two long hearings agree that the plant union was the actual wish and choice of the overwhelming majority of the employees; Federal Courts, after lengthy hearings or the review of lengthy hearings on appeal, have repeatedly found that the plant union was the voluntary choice of the employees; the affidavits of all employees are in the record stating that the plant union is their free and voluntary choice formed without interference and no employee has been impeached or shown to be part of any plan to testify falsely. Offers of proof of large numbers of employees giving detailed evidence and support thereof, showing successful negotiations of the Company for increases in wages, complete payment of all financial expenses by the members and no one else and many similar facts are in the record. The plant union has repeatedly petitioned for a secret election and been denied. This condition has continued over a period of years. Can the Labor Board validly disregard this evidence on the foundation of inference only?

(2) Where the statute creating the Board provides that the Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to control the proceedings of the Board and where this Court has held that the Labor Board must follow instructions of the Circuit Court of Appeals on a rehearing if such instructions are not an abuse of discretion and where Congress has recently passed the Federal Administrative Procedure Act strengthening and increasing the duty of the Circuit Court of Appeals to set aside Labor Board findings reached without due process and fair trial, can the Labor Board clearly and explicitly refuse on rehearing to follow such instructions of the Appellate Court?

(3) Can the Labor Board successfully maintain that it has satisfied the burden of proof resting upon it by merely producing slight evidence by a comparatively minute portion of testimony of discredited witnesses that the type of incidents which it regards as associated with domination occurred without in any way meeting or contradicting the evidence of all the employees that no dominance or interference existed on the ground that when the type of action has been shown, all testimony that interference did not exist may be ignored because all witnesses contrary to the Board may be presumed to be unable to know their own choice, or if they do know it, it may be assumed that they will perjure themselves on the witness stand or by affidavit through fear of their employer.

(4) Where the Board, after instructions from the Court of Appeals to take and consider as material the testimony of the employees (or a reasonable cross-section of them where all of them are tendered) and the Board refuses to take any substantial number of such employees offered as witnesses by the Company and none at all of those offered by the intervener, gives no consideration to its value in its opinion and summarizing its findings as follows:

> "Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily designated the DGWU, we are moreover impelled to ad- here to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is IMMATERIAL to issues such as those presented in this case."

and where such evidence is the best and most direct evidence without the consideration of which the intervener is deprived of an opportunity to present its case, is the refusal to receive it merely judicial error or a denial of due process?

(5) Where, in addition to the failure and refusal to take or consider the principal body of evidence for the taking of which the Court of Appeals remanded the hearing, it also appears that the same examiner who was influenced by bias and prejudice in the first hearing and was appointed over the protest of the intervener and the Company for the second hearing, was still activated by the same bias and prejudice and where the evidence of the employees as to violence of the International at nearby plants and threatened against them as a cause of their forming their own union, was refused in violation of the mandate of the Court of Appeals, can the Board be heard to urge that because of alleged doubt on minor grounds of denial of due process and fair trial, the court should ignore the primary and substantial grounds given by the Court of Appeals for vacating the Board's order?

ARGUMENT.

I.

A decision in favor of the Board and against the intervener in this case would be a denial and a stultification of the provisions and purposes of the National Labor Relations Act, and the establishment and enforcement of the exact reverse of the principle that the Act was enacted to enforce. It would deny the support of the law to the union which is beyond question the actual free choice of the employees.

It is axiomatic that the purpose of the Act is to support and protect employees in organizing or joining labor unions of their own choice rather than to force them into national unions they did not choose; or to destroy substantive rights of employees merely in order to punish employers for possible minor infractions, of which employers might or might not be guilty; or to free the Labor Board from the obligation to observe due process and the duty to actually weigh evidence. See Section 1 of the Act, which sets forth its purpose and policy:

> "It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to eliminate the causes of certain substantial obstructions to the free flow of commerce and to mitigate and eliminate these obstructions when they have occurred by encouraging the practice and procedure of collective bargaining and by protecting the exercise by workers of full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing, for the purpose of negotiating the terms and conditions of their employment or other mutual aid or protection." (Emphasis ours.)

The court said in NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, 135 Fed. (2d) 15, at page 18:

> "After all, the fundamental purpose of the Act is to secure to employees entitled to its protection the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing." (The emphasis here is that of the court.)

See National Labor Relations Board v. Gluek Brewing Company, 144 Fed. (2d) 847, 858:

> "The grave purpose of Congress in passing this Act was to provide the means for protecting the rights of labor to organize."

See Humble Oil Company v. NLRB, 113 Fed. (2d) 85 at 92:

> "It would be strange indeed if a labor organization, freely organized by a large majority of the employees, is to be destroyed whenever some well-wishing supervisor, contrary to his own duty and orders, says something in its favor. As we see it, the employees who freely formed these organizations have the right under the law to have them function. If the employer trespasses through his representatives, he and they ought to be stopped, but a more serious and demoralizing trespass than here appears is necessary to show such domination or interference or support as will justify annihilation of such organizations."

If the employees actually reach a conclusion as to their own choice and that fact is established, just as any other fact involving mental intent is established, by reasonable evaluation of the evidence, then subsidiary facts as to whether an employer indicated a preference or made critical remarks, or employer's property was used in insignificant ways, or three or four employees considered instructors as having supervisory powers, contrary to the impression of more than a thousand others, etc., etc., become unimportant and insufficient as grounds to set aside that choice. Where the preference of employees is actually in doubt, such subsidiary facts are, of course, valuable as secondary persuasive evidence as to whether, if some alleged choice has been made, the apparent evidence of choice is genuine, and the subsidiary facts or "badges" of domination or pretense of choice should be given due and proper weight.

Certainly the situation may exist where the fact of choice is definitely proved by any reasonable method of considering evidence, and this may be true even though the employer or employee may have taken steps beyond the boundary of strict neutrality. The fact that A might allow B to take insignificant privileges with A's property or, for that matter, that A might endeavor to urge or even bribe or threaten B in order to get B to adopt a certain position does not destroy the possibility and the right of B to actually take that position of his own free will and accord, and where an Act is passed with the purpose of securing that right to B, and where B has actually made such decision himself and expended thousands of dollars, years of work and secured valuable contract rights (III 807, 812-821, 947; II-704j-704n; II 713-714) in connection with such action, there can be no valid reason for denying him protection in such choice because someone else may or may not have acted improperly. The mental fact of choice or of good faith may be proved beyond any reasonable doubt where the evidence is sufficient and when such is the case, to continue to indulge speculative inferences that it might be all a mistake or a deception, or to give illogical importance to minor, secondary and subsidiary facts, or to assume that all employees are perjurers or lacking in ordinary intelligence is not a method of weighing evidence by any theory of jurisprudence, but merely a refusal to weigh, accept, consider or be actually receptive to evidence (Trial Examiner refuses, II 718, 613-14, IX 3217, IX 3255).

It has been proved beyond any reasonable doubt in the case at bar that the overwhelming majority of the employees in 1937 and for the nine years thereafter preferred and have selected the DGWU as their bargaining representatives. Our opponents may say that this is begging the question; that what this litigation is about is the attempt to ascertain whether there was free choice, whereas the above statement merely assumes it and proposes to go on from there. Let us see if it assumes such conclusions or if it merely recognizes what otherwise one would have to wilfully close his eyes in order not to admit.

Consider the following established facts:

1. All employees below the rank of supervisor have repeatedly offered, in good faith, to testify that they formed the DGWU of their own choice and free will without intereference, and to state how and why they formed the DGWU. (Vol. III, pp. 764-781, 792-795, 789-791, 783, 784-787; X 3829-3834.)

2. Every employee allowed to testify so stated. (II 704c-704e, 715, 664, 655, 624, 718l-718n, 718q-718u, 718y-718z; III 722-724, 725; VIII 2566-2570, 2579-2580, 2592, 2626-2630, 2722, 2770-2772, 2817-2818, 2841-2842 and 2847, 2869-2874, 2937; IX 3060-3061, 3140.) None were impeached nor shown to have had a part in any plot or plan to conceal the truth or commit perjury. "There was no presumption that these employees would commit perjury." (123 Fed. (2d) 215, l. c. 222).

3. The affidavits of 1,160 employees, being practically all of the employees at the time of the affidavits, are in the record (Vol. VI, pp. 1677 to 1749), specifically so stating, together with other affidavits and offers of proof (III 743, et seq., X 3829) to the same general effect by a large numbers of employees. See footnote*.

4. This condition has continued without interruption for nine years. The DGWU has functioned continuously during all that time, making or extending contracts with the employers, securing redress of grievances and paying every dime of its own expenses including all attorneys' fees and costs of litigation. (151 Fed. (2d), l. c. 877, X 3829-3834, II 690-696, X 3661, IX 3231, II 587-588, VIII 2594-2595, 2766, 2938, IX 3044, 3141.)

5. The Board in its first hearing of some five weeks offered two ex-employee witnesses of its own, Mrs. Greenhaw, who was completely discredited and not thereafter referred to or relied on by the Board, and May Fike, who

*The wording of this affidavit is as follows:

We, the undersigned employees of the Donnelly Garment Company and the Donnelly Garment Sales Company of Kansas City, Missouri, below the rank of officer or any position carrying with it the right to employ or discharge, again reassert under oath that it is our free, voluntary and considered wish and choice to belong to the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union and not to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union or any other union. We understand that there is in some quarters a disposition to question the fact that membership in our own union is our own voluntary choice, and therefore for the purpose of establishing that fact to the satisfaction of the Labor Board, the public, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and any and all others who may be interested, we hereby repeat the previous demands for an election and do ourselves specifically request that a fair and secret election of employees be held for the purpose of allowing us to designate our choice of labor unions and representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining, in which every employee shall be entitled to one vote and only one, and such vote shall be absolutely secret, and any other condition which shall be fair and just.

Each signer hereby further states that he or she has either read or had read to him or her the contents of this affidavit; that he or she understands that it is an affidavit and that the decision of whether to sign it or not has been left to affiant without any coercion, persuasion, or pressure of any sort, and that affiant at the time of making this statement is a bona fide employee of the Donnelly Garment Company or the Donnelly Garment Sales Company.

Other sworn offers of proof of large numbers of employees were offered to the same general effect, denying specific charges and reciting details of fact with more particularity. (See pages 742, 755, 789, 782, 784.)

was endeavoring to secure pay for some months after her discharge.

When it came to the consideration of the testimony of the Board's witnesses, of whom there were only two having any bearing on affairs at the factory, the examiner showed a complete and absolute reversal of attitude. He was ready to accept the statements of Mrs. Greenhaw, an ex-employee, as being more convincing than the statements of all the employees at the plant. He says in his intermediate report (A. 519): "The undersigned accepts this testimony of Mrs. Greenhaw as correct for the reason that Mrs. Greenhaw, of all the witnesses who testified at the hearing, was a disinterested party. Mrs. Greenhaw was not a member of any organization while employed at the Donnelly plant. Her testimony was given in a straightforward and unhesitating manner. She has always been employed in very responsible positions and left the respondent's employ with a good record. A further reason for the acceptance of her version is that the testimony of the respondent's witnesses with respect to the calling of the meeting and the circumstances surrounding it varied substantially." Now the record shows that this witness had a definite grudge against the Donnelly Company (II, 374, 375). She was a member of the union, but not of the League, although she says members of the union and members of the League were the same people (I, 365). She felt that she should have been made secretary to one of the executives of the Company, even though she knew no such position was open (II, 374). She had originally been brought to the Company by one of the officers, who made a place for her by creating a job which did not previously exist (II, 374). In the second hearing, the Board offered six ex-employees (no employee ever testified contrary to the DGWU's claim), one of whom stated that she knew "nothing whatsoever of the union activities in the Donnelly Garment Company" (X, 3660), but that she believed that no official or person with authority ever advised or suggested to any employee that he or she should join the DGWU or stay out of the International (X, 3660-1). Three of the remaining five readily agreed that the plant union was the voluntary choice of the employees themselves (Dorsey, IX, 3383; Skeens, IX, 3463; Copenhaver, X, 3506), although these ex-employees had various complaints against the Company or the plant union, which they were eager to discuss (Dorsey, IX, 3383; Skeens, IX, 3462-3). Neither of the remaining two denies that the overwhelming majority of the employees organized the plant union of their own free choice, although they personally did not approve of such union at the time of their testimony more than five years later (X, 3492 to 3529; X, 3581). Mrs. Weilert states that she believed the organization was formed by the voluntary action of the employees at that time, and that her husband had written a letter at her dictation repeating the assertion that her action in union matters was voluntary and according to her own wishes (X, 3581; X, 3591, 3690). The last witness of this group, May Stevens, stated that as far as she was concerned personally she committed perjury several years previously when she made an affidavit that the DGWU was her own choice (X, 3690); that she joined the International the same day she signed the affidavit (X, 3696, 3708); and for some time secretly furnished information about Donnelly employees to the International (X, 3708). Their memories were refreshed some five years after the events to which they testified, by the International or the Board representatives a few days before the hearing (Dorsey, IX, 3369; Skeens, IX, 3466; Copenhaver, X, 3520; Stevens, X, 3685), and they admitted bias (Skeens, IX, 3447; Weilert, X, 3564; Stevens, X, 3696, 3708), and even hatred (Dorsey, IX, 3364, 3365). They also admitted that the violence of the International threatened against Donnelly employees was a substantial cause of the formation of the plant union (Copenhaver, X, 3514; Weilert, X 3581; Skeens, IX, 3455).

6. Federal Courts have four times heard, or considered on appeal evidence in each of four different hearings, each of which occupied five of six weeks, in injunction cases on this same general dispute between the same parties or on appeals from Labor Board hearings, and have repeatedly found as a fact from that evidence that the DGWU was the voluntary choice of the employees, uninfluenced by the employer.

See, 21 Fed. Supp. 807, at 809:

> "The employees of the Donnelly Garment Companies, over 1300 in number, have completed an organization known as the 'Donnelly Garment Workers' Union.' They have negotiated with their employers a contract which provides specifically for the wages, hours, terms and conditions of their employment that are entirely satisfactory to both parties. So far as this hearing shows, they are unanimous in this attitude, and have declared their opposition to affiliation with the defendant union, or with any other unrelated organization. Among these employees there are no members of the defendant union shown by the evidence, and no division exists among them. The proofs overwhelmingly establish that they are neither company inspired nor dominated." (Italics ours.)

and 119 Fed. (2d) 892, at 893:

> "In considering the question of jurisdiction, we accept as established the following facts: * * * That the defendants have at all times during the existence of their controversy with the plaintiffs insisted that the Donnelly Garment Company disregarded the wishes of its employees with respect to representation for purposes of collective bargaining, that it recognize the International as the exclusive bargaining agent for all of the Company's employees, and that the Company disregard the contracts which it has entered into with its employees, through their independent union, relative to representation, hours, wages and working conditions."

and 151 Fed. (2d) 854, at 877:

"For more than seven years the employees have defended the plant union, at great expense to themselves, before every tribunal in which its integrity has been called in question. Throughout this period they have been fully advised of their rights under the National Labor Relations Act. There have been no defections from their ranks. None of them permitted to testify has been impeached on the witness stand. The credibility of none of them has been attacked. Five years after the organization of the plant union all of its members have testified to their deliberate choice of it as their agency for collective bargaining with their employer. In this situation there is no room, in my opinion, for the inference that these employees have been, and continue to be the victims of an illegal coercion by means unknown to them and too subtle to be susceptible of proof, or for the inference that they have surrendered their right freely to choose their labor affiliation in return for the occasional inconsequential use of the Garment Company's telephone, mimeograph machines, and office facilities."

and Vol. V of the record, being a part of the findings of Judge Miller, at page 1616e:

"Shortly after the Supreme Court of the United States sustained the validity of the National Labor Relations Act, and on April 27, 1937, one hundred per cent of plaintiffs' employees (other than officers, executives and those with authority to hire or discharge) voluntarily formed and became members of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, and unanimously designated and selected the nine members of the Executive Committee of said union as their sole representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining with plaintiffs in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment and all other conditions of employment, and all matters for their mutual aid and protection. Said employees have at all times freely administered and maintained said union. At the time of the formation of said union and at all times since, none of said employees have been or are members of the defendant International."

See 55 Fed. Sup. 587, at 590:

"There can be no doubt that at the time an overwhelming majority of the Donnelly Company employees, numbering some 1,200, were entirely satisfied with their working conditions and wages, and only a small minority had professed any interest in the International's organizational activities."

We submit that federal courts in this country are sufficiently competent and reliable judges of evidence to insure that where a dispute on the same subject between the same parties has been tried before them or appealed to them four times, as a result of four hearings of five or six weeks each and one of about one week, and where the trial courts, or the appellate court on review of such exhaustive evidence have repeatedly found that the employees formed their union of their own free will and choice without interference, and have never found to the contrary, although they have sometimes made no finding at all on that point, that particular point may be safely regarded as an established fact.

While no federal court has held to the contrary, the Labor Board has twice reached an opposite conclusion by the expedient of totally disregarding and considering as wholly immaterial the repeated testimony of every employee in the plant as to his or her choice in what he or she said were the causes and reasons for the formation of the plant union (A. 619, 603). These causes included resentment against the violence being used by the International at smaller plants some six or eight blocks away and being threatened against these employees when the small plants were whipped into line, their desire to run their own affairs, and resentment at the announcement that Sylvia Hull was to represent Donnelly employees or the "Donnelly Local" at an ILGWU convention at a time when none of the employees had any knowledge of any ILGWU organization within their plant, nor any desire to belong to such an organization when, as later developed, Sylvia Hull represented only one other employee besides herself. (VIII, 2573-2576, 2644-2645; V, 1562-1563, 1566.) Perlstein and another prepared her convention speech and resolution. (V, 1569-1570; VIII, 2712, 2720, 2929, 2997; IX, 3088.

7. All other evidence of the Board is merely inference from facts which may be used to indicate whatever preconceived interpretation either side may put upon them or from alleged facts which were found or supported by generally discredited testimony and against overwhelming unimpeached testimony to the contrary. (See the detailed offer of proof of a great majority of employees: III, 743-763.)

8. The Board and the ILGWU have repeatedly denied petitions for secret elections as petitioned for by the DGWU or offers to submit, if the International would join, to the result of any fair and secret election. (A, 409, 560; X, 3844; XI, 3965; IV, 1336qqq; I, 242; III, 783.

The Board will doubtless defend its refusal to grant an election over a period of nine years by saying that the Board does not hold elections while a charge of domination is pending. But this does not prevent the International from agreeing to such a test if it really wants or is willing to risk the answer being developed. If a secret election, so controlled that no one will know how any individual employee votes, will not determine, or at least throw great light on that fact, then no method of investigation will do so. If our opponents feel that the election should be delayed until sometime in the future when they feel that they might win, it would be equally reasonably to delay still longer because thereafter the employees might be converted to still a third point of view. The logical position is that the employees are entitled to their choice now, without burden or prejudice, and have been so entitled for the past nine years.

However, the denial of an election does somewhat limit the alternative positions left to the Board. It is hardly logical for the Board to deny petitions for a secret election made by substantially all the employees over a period of several years and then when the employees go on the witness stand or present affidavits as to their choice and how and why it was made, to claim that such evidence is inconsequential and immaterial because it is a violation of the principle of secret elections. (Examiner, supra, II, 7, ob.) The validity of a labor union does not depend on certifications by the Board, nor on the Board's holding an election, nor does the law hold that its valid existence, and right to be treated as such, cannot be established by the union itself, nor found as a collateral court proceeding. It is equally true that where the Board, without an election, makes a finding without due process, or in direct violation of the directions as to material evidence by its supervisory court, acting within its discretion, or in open disregard of common sense, weighing the probative value of evidence, all of which exist in this case, its orders and findings must be set aside.

The Board might undertake to claim that all employees are perjurers, but with no evidence whatever on which to base such a charge, it would be difficult to support, and the Board, in this case, makes it only by inference, when it says that employees who know the employer has representatives in court will be afraid to tell the truth under oath or in affidavits. This still claims that the employees are perjurers, but suggests that the cause is fear rather than bribery or something else. If the evidence of choice of the employees were less decisive or had existed only briefly during a period of excitement or fluctuation, or the question put to them was not clear, or there was reason to believe that the result was only temporary, or there were evidence of fear or bribery, then an argument might be based on such situation to indicate that the result was unreliable and secondary evidence of inference might be important. The Board, however, has recognized that to actually weigh the sworn clear and reasonable testimony of all the employees without any impeaching evidence against them, or any of them, against inferences that they might have been dominated by such petty instances as are bound to happen among hundreds of employees over a period of years, would make it logically impossible to find against the overwhelming direct evidence. The burden of proof is still on the Board. It could not be met by the inference resulting from the fact that four or five ex-employees with admitted bias and who had their memories refreshed by International organizers five years after the facts occurred, had the impression, contrary to everyone else, and the sworn statements of all who knew the fact, that Rose Todd or Hobart Atherton, or someone else had a position of authority, or that the instructors had such place, or that Rose Todd was representing the employers and not her union on the piece work committee, or that committee members were not docked when a few minutes late from committee meetings, just as they were not docked when late from the dentist's office or other personal errands. Employees were regularly allowed to transact business while at the plant. (II, 719-720; VIII, 2643-2644, 2693; VIII, 2621-2622; VIII, 2579-2580.)

Thus the Board retreats to two desperate and untenable positions: (1) That employees do not have enough intelligence to make a choice. They cannot know whether they prefer A to B after months of consideration, as their bargaining representative (or, if they can, it may be assumed that they will state it untruthfully). Therefore, the Board will make such choice for them. Perhaps instances might arise in which the question was not clearly put to them or the result was a fluctuating or uncertain one, as suggested above, but that is not the case here. The Act clearly contemplates that it is the employees' own choice which is to be enforced, regardless of whether the Board or the International believes they used sound reasoning and made the choice they should have made or not. (Section 1 of the Act, quoted supra.) Nowhere in the law is it held that the Board should make the choice for them.

NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding, 135 Fed. (2d) 847.
Humble Oil v. NLRB, 113 Fed. (2d) 85.
Ballston-Stillwater Knitting Co. v. NLRB, 98 Fed. (2d) 758.
NLRB v. Swank Products, 108 Fed. (2d) 872.
NLRB v. Sands Mfg. Co., 306 U. S. 332, 83 Law Ed. 682.

Consolidated Edison Co. v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 197, 83 Law Ed. 126.
NLRB v. Gluek Brewing Co., 144 Fed. (2d) 847.
Donnelly v. NLRB, 151 Fed. (2d) 854 at 877.
L. Grief & Bro. v. NLRB, 108 Fed. (2d) 551.
NLRB v. Lion-Shoe Co., 97 Fed. (2d) 448.
NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, 99 Fed. (2d) 153.
Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. NLRB, 112 Fed. (2d) 545.

(2) That it makes no difference what the choice of the employees is. They are no longer entitled to it if the employer has done or said something which might conceivably in other situations have dominated the employee. This would be carrying the "impure atmosphere" doctrine to such absurd lengths that it would always be possible for an employer to defeat any union of which he did not approve by the simple expedient of favoring it. He could do this by one speech or half a dozen minor actions without leaving any possibility of discovering his inner purpose. No organization of hundreds of employees over years of time will ever be valid if the greatly outweighed testimony of a few biased witnesses as to acts or circumstances which might by inference have spelled domination in some circumstances can overcome clear and overwhelming and persisting evidence of genuine and actual freedom of choice.

The Board is not enfitled to ignore the established principles of common sense as to evidence to the extent of disregarding the sworn testimony of any number of witnesses who know the fact and who are not impeached or discredited or contradicted on the basis of mere inference, suspicion or conjecture based on disputed facts which could certainly exist concurrently with the truth stated by such witnesses. (See Cupples v. NLRB, 106 Fed. (2d) 100, l. c. 104:)

"We shall attempt to make a fair statement of what we consider to be the important facts disclosed by the evidence, keeping in mind that, while the burden of proof was upon the Board, it is entitled to have the evidence and all reasonable inferences which may be drawn therefrom viewed in the light most favorable to its conclusions; that questions involving the weight of evidence and the credibility of witnesses were for it to determine, but that evidence which merely furnishes grounds for suspicion and conjecture proves nothing, and that the Board, like a jury, may not disregard the uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached and credible witnesses." (Italics supplied.)

As a footnote following the above quotation the court added:

"The testimony of a witness not shaken on cross-examination and not contradicted by any witness, fact or circumstance, must be accepted as true. (Woodward v. Chicago M. & St. P. Ry., 8 Circ., 145 F. 577, 582.)"

Humble Oil Co. v. NLRB, 113 Fed. (2d) 85, at 92 (quoted supra).

NLRB v. Mathieson, 114 Fed. (2d) 796, l. c. 801:

"The Board makes reference to the fact that respondent permitted the association to hold the election for members of its council on company property. At that time, however, the association already had a clear majority of the employees; and this could not have influenced the obtaining of the majority * * * While it may have been better for the election to have been held at some other place, we cannot see that this circumstance is sufficient, either alone or in connection with other circumstances, to support the conclusion that the association is dominated by respondent."

The fact that the records of the association were kept in respondent's vault is utterly without significance when considered, as they must be, in the light of surrounding circumstances."

NLRB v. A. S. Abell, 97 Fed. (2d) 951, l. c. 957:

"In this respect the burden of proof was upon the union, and while the charge was supported only by conjecture and suspicion, it was refuted by positive and direct testimony. The failure of the Board to credit this testimony does not supply the lack of affirmative proof of unfair labor practice on the part of the employer."

NLRB v. Vincennes Steel Corporation, 117 Fed. (2d) 169, l. c. 174:

"We fail to find any evidence as to the number of employees, office help and supervisory officials who had cars, but we assume the number was more than six. We think the incident is without material significance. It does not furnish the basis for a healthy suspicion, much less a reasonable inference."

See, also:

St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, 298 U. S. 38, 73, 56 S. Ct. 720, 80 L. Ed. 1033.

Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U. S. 292, 304-305, 57 S. Ct. 724, 81 L. Ed. 1093.

Railroad Commission v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 302 U. S. 388, 393, 58 S. Ct. 344, 82 L. Ed. 319.

Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1, 14, 15, 58 S. Ct. 773, 999, 82 L. Ed. 1129.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 146, 177, 61 S. Ct. 908, 923, 85 L. Ed. 1251.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 218 U. S. 88, 102, 30 S. Ct. 651, 656, 54 L. Ed. 946.

St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, 298 U. S. 38, 75, 78, 56 S. Ct. 720, 736, 737, 80 L. Ed. 1033.

Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. (Public Util.) Commission, 301, U. S. 292, 304, 305, 57 S. Ct. 724, 730, 81 L. Ed. 1093.

If the methods of procedure were treated as an end in themselves and as more important than the purpose of the Act which is to support the actual choice and right of employees to select and deal through the bargaining agency of that choice, whenever and however that fact clearly appears, then the tail would wag the dog. The length of court decisions on labor cases demonstrates that no secondary detail such as the possible use of employer's property in petty ways is conclusive, for if it were most labor cases could be decided in five lines of opinion. Such arguments from inference are useful only to aid in determining the fundamental fact of free choice of the employees without domination and when such fact is established, the inference from details of procedure ceases to have decisive weight.

If we correctly understand the Board's position, it is that all it need do is to show the type of actions commonly associated with domination. This meets and satisfies the burden of proof resting upon the Board and the case is over. If, per chance, the employees and all of them wish to testify to the contrary (III 743-763), the law holds that they do not know their own minds, or, if they do, then it may safely be assumed that they are unable to testify truthfully and cannot speak freely in the presence of their employer. See the statement of the Board's position by its attorney, quoted in the footnote to the opinion below, 151 Fed. (2d) l. c. 872:

> "It is the Labor Board's duty to show the acts of the employer are the type that interfered with, restrained or coerced; * * * the employees who have been the subject of unfair labor practices really become so interfered with or dominated that they do not know their own minds, even assuming they were able to speak in the presence of the employer freely. It is our position they cannot speak freely in the presence of their employer. * * *"

Thus, if the Board finds on the testimony of half a dozen biased and discredited ex-employees that they had certain impressions or that certain secondary facts occurred from which inferences might be drawn, then any amount of contrary, direct testimony is presumed to come from their lack of ability to know their own minds or, as an alternative, it might be assumed, without any evidence to that effect, that they are committing perjury. We think there is no authority for this position.

Now, of course, a litigant is entitled to try to prove that this picture does not prove what it seems to be. But in undertaking to destroy or weaken the sworn testimony of everyone having knowledge of the particular fact to be developed such litigant should certainly expect to affirmatively show that the records made by these people were not in the substantial number claimed, or that their attitude only lasted a week or two, or that at least some of the witnesses were not worthy of belief, or by cross-examination to show their insincerity or to affirmatively produce evidence of some plot by them to misrepresent the facts. But to simply shrug off the testimony on the implication that everybody knows that cannot be true, or on the inference that the actions of supervisors or employer might have bribed or dominated the group in some sets of entirely different circumstances, but with no evidence that it did so here, is simply no answer to this evidence whatever. One does not get rid of overwhelming, unimpeached, sworn testimony of self-respecting American citizens so easily.

The purpose of the law is not to empower either the International or the DGWU to increase its organization but to enable this group of employees considered as human beings, to proceed in labor matters as it chooses, without penalty either from the company, the International or the Labor Board.

L. Grief & Bro. v. NLRB, 108 Fed. (2d) 551, l. c. 558:

> "It is not an answer to point to circumstances indicating that the management preferred an inside to an outside union, or that citizens in the community entertained a hostile feeling toward the Amalgamated. It goes without saying that the determination of the employees to form their own association and to be free from the outside interference of a national union was influenced by their past experience in the plant, and by the general opinion in the community of which they are a part; but these contacts did not deprive them of their rights under the Act, or require them to choose bargaining representatives offensive to their employer or to their fellow citizens, so long as their choice was not dominated or interfered with by the employer."

See also Quaker State Oil v. NLRB, 119 Fed. (2d) 631, l. c. 632.

In NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., 135 Fed. (2d) 15, at page 25, the court said:

"The term 'evidence' as used in this connection means 'substantial evidence,' that is, 'such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion' (Consolidated Edison Co. of New York v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 197, 229, 59 S. Ct. 206, 217, 83 L. Ed. 126) and affords "a substantial basis of facts from which the fact in issue can be reasonably inferred' (National Labor Relations Board v. Columbian Enameling & Stamping Co., 306 U. S. 292, 299, 59 S. Ct. 501, 505, 83 L. Ed. 660). See also Quaker State Oil Refining Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, loc. cit., supra, and Martel Mills Corporation v. National Labor Relations Board, 4 Cir. 114 F. (2d) 624, 627-629. While it is for the Board, therefore, to find the facts and to draw material inferences from the evidence (National Labor Relations Board v. Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., 303 U. S. 261, 271, 58 S. Ct. 571, 82 L. Ed. 831, 115 A. L. R. 307), it is for a reviewing court to say whether the Board's findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether its conclusions are reasonably inferable from the evidence which it accredits. Guided by these standards, it is our opinion that the Board's findings of unfair labor practices on the part of the respondent are not supported by substantial evidence."

The so-called determination of whether substantial evidence exists which proceeds by blankly ignoring the testimony of any number of those who must know whether they were dominated (see foot note) although that testimony has not been weakened by impeachment or cross-examination, and promptly accepting in contradiction thereto small bits of frequently disputed testimony as to minor details, which could be no more than inferences or basis for persuasion in a close case and each bit of which is obviously colored by prejudice, and frequently contradicted by a much larger number of employees, is simply not a determination that substantial evidence exists but a refusal to determine that fact and a headlong, biased conclusion without weighing evidence at all. The Board has itself recognized that absurd methods of weighing evidence are not actually the consideration of evidence.

See opinion of Court of Appeals remanding this case, 123 Fed. (2d) 215, at 222.

"The individuals who form an unincorporated association certainly should know what sort of an organization it is, how it happened to be formed, who influenced its formation and who controls it."

In Bahan Textile Machinery Co., Inc., v. United Electrical Radio and Machine Works of America, case No. C-2209, 43 NLRB 97, 11 Labor Relations Reference Manual 6, the trial examiner accepted the testimony of two witnesses in one respect when contradicted by two other witnesses and in another respect accepted the testimony of the second two when contradicted by the first two. The Board said:

> "Although the trial examiner had the opportunity at the hearing to observe the witnesses, we cannot agree with his resolution of the conflicts in testimony. The record affords no basis for believing Kirby and White, in one respect, when contradicted by Bedenbaugh and Thomason, and for accepting the testimony of Bedenbaugh and Thomason, in another respect, when contradicted by Kirby and White. Moreover, standing alone, the uncontradicted testimony of Thomason, that Bedenbaugh told the respondent's employees that they did not need the assistance of a union to obtain an increase in pay, is of insufficient probative value to support the allegations of the complaint. Under the circumstances, therefore, we are unable to find that the alleged unfair labor practices have been established by the record. Accordingly, we find that the respondent has not interfered with, restrained, or coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act. We shall, therefore, dismiss the complaint."

We do not mean to argue that the existence or non-existence of substantial evidence is a question which can be determined by a pair of scales or a foot rule, or any mechanical process not involving the use of enlightened judgment, but, on the other hand, it is equally not a matter subject only to the unreasoning individual fancy or the prejudice of the trier of the fact. It is governed by legal principles, common sense and experience and the results reached must come within the bounds of such principles in order to be valid and sustained by a higher court. For example, the result must be based on a consideration of all the evidence and not on exclusive preoccupation with a particular part only. See the case of NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, 99 Fed. (2d) 153, at 177:

"It is suggested that this court should accept the findings of the Board; that contradictions, inconsistencies, and erroneous inferences are immune from criticism or attack by Section 10 (e) of the Act, 49 Stat. 453, 29 USCA, Sec. 160 (e), which provides that 'the findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive.' But the courts have not construed this language as compelling the acceptance of findings arrived at by accepting part of the evidence and totally disregarding other convincing evidence.

"We are bound by the Board's findings of fact as to matters within its jurisdiction, where the findings are supported by substantial evidence; but we are not bound by findings which are not so supported. 29 USCA, Sec. 160 (e) (f); Washington, Virginia & Maryland Coach Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 301 U. S. 142, 57 Sup. Ct. 648, 650, 81 L. Ed. 965 * * *. Substantial evidence is evidence furnishing a substantial basis of facts from which the facts in issue can reasonably be inferred; and the test is not satisfied by evidence which merely creates a suspicion or which amounts to no more than a scintilla or which gives equal support to inconsistent inferences. Cf. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333, 339-343, 53 S. Ct. 391, 393, 394, 77 L. Ed. 819." Appalachian Electric Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 4 Cir., 93 F. (2d) 985, 989.

"'Substantial evidence' means more than a mere scintilla. It is of substantial and relevant consequence and excludes vague, uncertain, or irrelevant matter. It implies a quality of proof which induces conviction and makes an impression on reason. It means that the one weighing the evidence takes into consideration all the facts presented to him and all reasonable inferences, deductions and conclusions to be drawn therefrom and, considering them in their entirety and relation to each other, arrives at a fixed conviction.

"The rule of substantial evidence is one of fundamental importance and is the dividing line between law and arbitrary power. Testimony is the raw material out of which we construct truth and, unless all of it is weighed in its totality, errors will result and great injustices be wrought. National Labor Relations Board v. Thompson Products, Inc., 3 Cir., 97 F. (2d) 13, 15." (Italics ours.)

See Donnelly Garment Company v. NLRB, 123 Fed. (2d) 215, at 224:

"The truth is that a controversy tried before a court or before an administrative agency is not ripe for decision until all competent and material evidence proffered by the parties has been received and considered." (Italics ours.)

See NLRB v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 87 Law Ed. 579, at 592:

> "Findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support its findings, is heard and weighed."

For example, evidence that A shot a revolver at B with the intention of killing him and that the shot actually did kill him, if considered alone to the exclusion of other material evidence, is not necessarily substantial evidence that A is guilty of murder. Other material evidence if admitted may show self-defense so conclusively that it cannot be said that there is any substantial evidence of murder.

In the case at bar the Board not only failed to consider all the evidence, including the primary evidence (the testimony of the employees themselves as to their mental intent), but it even refused to admit it in substance, in defiance of the direction of the reviewing court, and reasserted in its second opinion that it flatly refused to consider it material.

In its first opinion the Board said (V. A., p. 603):

> "The respondent and the DGWU contend that its employees formed and joined the DGWU of their own free will in order to resist unionization by the ILGWU and were not coerced or interfered with in their choice of the DGWU or in their rejection of the ILGWU. In support of this contention they sought to introduce the testimony of the members of the DGWU that they were not dominated by the respondent but formed, joined and supported the organization of their own free will. They also offered evidence to show that the employees knew of the violence accompanying the ILGWU organizational campaigns at other garment factories and of threats by ILGWU representatives that the same tactics would be used at the respondent's plant and formed the DGWU for that reason. The trial examiner refused these offers of proof, ruling that such testimony was irrelevant and immaterial to the issues. We have affirmed the rulings of the trial examiner on those offers of proof * * *."

On the appeal the Circuit Court of Appeals pointed out and specifically ruled that such evidence was relevant and material and that it must be taken and given due consideration in any valid decision of the case.

See 123 Fed. (2d) 215, l. c. 222:

"It was not shown that any of the employees of the Donnelly Company whose testimony was offered was under any disqualifying disability. There was no presumption that these employees would commit perjury, and, even if the trial examiner believed that they would perjure themselves, that would not have affected the admissibility of their evidence. It is elementary that there is a distinction between the admissibility of evidence and its weight or sufficiency. National Labor Relations Board v. Bell Oil & Gas Co., 5 Cir., 98 F. (2d) 870, 871. Surely, if the testimony of an employee which tends to prove that an employer interfered with or supported the organization of an independent union is admissible, the testimony of an employee which tends to disprove domination and support of such a union by an employer is equally admissible. Evidence is relevant if it tends either to prove or disprove any issue in the case. We do not say that the trial examiner was required to take the same testimony from 1,200 witnesses. There were available to him well-known expedients for limiting the number of witnesses where their testimony was cumulative."

And at page 225:

> "Our conclusion is that the petition of the Board for enforcement of the order under review must be denied. We think that the least the Board can do, in order to cure the defects in its procedure caused by the failure of the trial examiner to receive admissible evidence, is to vacate the order and the findings and conclusions upon which it is based; to accord to the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the trial examiner; and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order."

In its second opinion rendered on the rehearing as directed by the Court of Appeals in the above opinion the Board said it had admitted the evidence in question. This was hardly accurate since in fact it admitted only eleven employee witnesses for the company and none for the DGWU in its direct case, and only six on surrebuttal on strictly limited details not on the point of evidence directed to be taken by the appellate court. Certainly this cannot be considered any reasonable cross section of the testimony of 1,200 employees. The Board says it considered such evidence, although the entire opinion shows that it did not give two lines of serious consideration to the actual force or value of such evidence. This is true of both reports of the examiner and both reports of the Board, which included a great many pages of discussion of the evidence. Then the Board makes the actual situation perfectly clear and beyond question by adding in its second opinion the following (see Vol. A, p. 619):

> "Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily desig> nated the DGWU, we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case." (Italics ours.)

In other words, the Court of Appeals is mistaken when it says this evidence is material. It is, of course, absurd for a trial body which is authoritatively told that certain evidence is material and its weight as such must be considered, to say, "I know that it is not material." And that, "I adhere to my former opinion." If it is immaterial, whether in legal or layman's language, its weight is inconsequential, or more accurately, nonexistent, and the body acting on the persistent belief and declared principle that material evidence is immaterial cannot give it proper weight. It is excluded before it ever reaches the scales of judgment for any deliberate estimate. Yet there can be no doubt that the court correctly stated the law.

See, also, Martel Mills v. NLRB, 114 Fed. (2d) 624, at 631:

> "Obviously, our chief guide is the words of the witness under oath who undertook to disclose the workings of his mind." (Italics ours.)

The question is thus frankly presented whether the appellate court has any control whatever over the administrative board. The point that the Court of Appeals' findings and directions became the law of the case and just as binding as any other law, is discussed elsewhere herein.

It is likewise true that the fact-finding body is not entitled to repeal the principle of the burden of proof. If two equally probable but inconsistent inferences are possible from the same set of facts, then ordinarily a finding cannot properly be based upon either of them and the party bearing the burden of proof has failed to establish his position. See Penn. Railroad Co. v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333, 53 S. Ct. 391, 77 L. Ed. 819, at 823:

> "We, therefore, have a case belonging to that class of cases where proven facts give equal support to each of two inconsistent inferences; in which event, neither of them being established judgment, as a matter of law, must go against the party upon whom rests the necessity of sustaining one of these inferences as against the other, before he is entitled to recover." (Citing cases.)

See, also, Smith v. First National Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 611, 97 Ann. Dec. 59:

> "There being several inferences deducible from the facts which appear, and equally consistent with all these facts, the plaintiff has not maintained the proposition upon which alone he would be entitled to recover. There is strictly no evidence to warrant a jury in finding that the loss was occasioned by negligence and not by theft. When the evidence tends equally to sustain either of two inconsistent propositions, neither of them can be said to have been established by legitimate proof. A verdict in favor of the party bound to maintain one of these propositions against the other is necessarily wrong."

It can hardly be urged in the case at bar that the complainant ever reached the point of a state of facts from which a reasonable conclusion in its favor might be drawn when actually considered in the light of the contrary evidence. The inference from a number of minor circumstances that the employees might be dominated by the employer and that all of the employees are perjurers simply cannot be said without completely departing from reason, to be entitled to be seriously compared with the infergnce that several hundred unimpeached, uncontradicted witnesses without exception who know the fact are telling the truth. Obviously, if two different inferences may be reasonably founded upon an established fact and one may be shown to be overwhelmingly more probable, then the trier of the fact is not entitled to say under the guise of considering whether there is substantial evidence that he will arbitrarily place reliance on evidence which established rules and experience show to be discredited and no longer worthy of belief. (See NLRB v. Sands Manufacturing, 83 L. Ed. 682, 306 U. S. 332, and NLRB v. Bell, 98 Fed. [2d] 406, 410.)

We have quoted the Cupples case, supra, to the effect that evidence which merely furnishes ground for suspicion, does not entitle the Board to disregard the uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached and credible witnesses. See, also, Foote Bros. Gear and Machine Corp. v. NLRB, 114 Fed. (2d) 611, at 621:

> "Undoubtedly, the rule is well established that a finding by referee, trial court, or administrative board if supported by substantial evidence should be accepted by an appellate reviewing court. This does not relieve the appellate court, however, of the duty of examining the evidence to ascertain whether the findings is supported by evidence. And an examination of the evidence necessitates an analysis which to a certain extent is a weighing of such evidence. In fact, the court's duty to make this examination and anaylsis of the evidence is quite as clear (even though more burdensome and involves the tedious study of testimony and witnesses' qualifications and biases, etc.) as the construction and application of statutes or any other legal question. Evidence, to be substantial, 'Must be enough to justify, if the trial were to a jury, a refusal to direct a verdict when the conclusion sought to be drawn from it is one of fact for the jury.". (Citing cases.)

In Pennsylvania Railway v. Chamberlain (supra), at page 823 of the L. Ed., the court says:

"And the desired inference is precluded for the further reason that respondent's right of recovery depends upon the existence of a particular fact which must be inferred from proven facts, and this is not permissible in the face of the positive and otherwise uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached witnesses consistent with the facts actually proved, from which testimony it affirmatively appears that the fact sought to be inferred did not exist. This conclusion results from a consideration of many decisions, of which the following are examples: Wabash R. Co. v. De Tar, (C. C. A. 8th) 141 Fed. 932, 935, 4 LRA (N. S.) 352; Ragsdale v. Southern R. Co., (C. C.) 121 Fed. 924, 926; Cunard S. S. Co. v. Kelley, (C. C. A. 1st) 126 Fed. 610, 617; Frazier v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co., 108 Ga. 807, 33 S. E. 996; Bowsher v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 174 Mich. 339, 344, 140 N. W. 524; Rashall v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 249 Mo. 509, 522, 155 S. W. 426; George v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 213 Mo. App. 668, 674, 251 S. W. 727; Stines v. Dillman, ... Mo. App. ...., 4 S. W. (2d) 477, 478; Akerson v. Great Northern R. Co., 158 Minn. 369, 374, 197 N. W. 842; Butterfield v. Trittipo, 67 Ind. 338, 343, 344; Blid v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, 99 Neb. 691-693, 131 N. W. 1027). A rebuttable inference of fact, as said by the court in the Wabash R. Co. case, 'must necessarily yield to credible evidence of the actual occurrence.' And, as stated by the court in George v. Missouri P. R. Co., 213 Mo. App. 668, 251 S. W. 729, supra, 'It is well settled that where plaintiff's case is based upon an inference or inferences, that the case must fail upon proof of undisputed facts inconsistent with such inferences'."

In short, where a substantial number of witnesses who know the facts testify and are neither impeached nor discredited, the Board is not free to repeatedly refuse to consider such evidence as material and to use subsidiary facts which are the basis of inferences as a ground for finding the opposite. Where the Board, having perhaps become somewhat partisan in the heat of battle, evolves rules of evidence of its own, or disregards principles of evidence based on the experience of mankind and makes a finding which cannot be supported by logical reason or the experience crystallized in the principles of law, then that finding must be set aside. It is submitted that that is the situation in the case at bar.

But even without this the Board's order should be set aside and its complaint dismissed because it has treated and ruled as immaterial and of no weight, evidence, without the consideration of which as material and of value the law holds that no judgment in favor of the Board can be valid or sustained.

II.

When the Court of Appeals on the first appeal from the Labor Board expressly directed that the testimony of employees should be considered material evidence on the rehearing, such ruling became the law of the case, and the refusal of the Labor Board to comply with it makes it necessary that the order of the Board be set aside and its complaint dismissed.

(a) The situation in the case at bar.

(b) The application of the rule.

(c) The Indiana and Michigan electric case.

(d) The effect of the Administrative Procedure Act.

(a) The situation in the case at bar.

The situation presented by the first review proceeding, as stated by the Circuit Court of Appeals (123 Fed. (2d), l. c. 222) was that:

> "At the hearing before the Trial Examiner, the petitioners proffered the evidence of the employees of the Donnelly Company, some 1,200 in number, to show how and why they formed the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, to show that no influence was brought to bear upon them by the employer either in the formation or administration of the Union, to show what the president of the Company had said to them at a mass meeting in the spring of 1937, to show that their freedom to organize and to choose their own representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining had not been interfered with by their employer, and to show that their union, both in its formation and administration, was exclusively controlled and supported by them. The Trial Examiner refused to receive this evidence. He permitted the petitioners to make formal offers of proof."

With respect to such situation the court said:

> "We have no doubt that the testimony offered by the petitioners in their efforts to prove that the employees of the Donnelly Company formed the Donnelly Garment Workers Union of their own free will and that the formation and administration of that union was free from employer influence, domination and support, and to explain how and why they came to organize the union, was competent, relevant and material and should have been received. The individuals who form an unincorporated association certainly should know what sort of an organization it is, how it happened to be formed, who influenced its formation, and who controls it. We think there can be no doubt of the right of the members of such an organization to testify to such matters, and that their evidence is admissible regardless of its weight." (Italics ours.) (l. c. 222.)

That court then said:

> "That a refusal by an administrative agency such as the National Labor Relations Board to receive and consider competent and material evidence offered by a party to a proceeding before it, amounts to a denial of due process is not open to debate. (Citing cases.)
>
> "The truth is that a controversy tried before a court or before an administrative agency is not ripe for decision until all competent and material evidence proffered by the parties has been received and considered." (l. c. 224.)

The express holding of that court was:

> "Our conclusion is that the petition of the Board for enforcement of the order under review must be denied. We think that the least that the Board can do, in order to cure the defects in its procedure

caused by the failure of the Trial Examiner to receive admissible evidence, is to vacate the order and the findings and conclusions upon which it is based, to accord to the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner, and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order." (l. c. 225.)

Clearly and explicitly, the Court of Appeals on the first appeal directed the Board to do three things: (1) To vacate its order. (2) To receive all of the evidence specifically pointed out and determined to be material. (3) To consider this evidence in the light of and together with all of the material evidence before making new findings and a new order.

The Board did vacate its first order. Obviously, the Board did not do either of the other two things. On the point of receiving the evidence it allowed some eleven employees offered by the company to testify, but none whatsoever of those offered by the organization of the employees themselves—being substantially the entire group of employees. The ruling at IX 3255, which was made before the intervener had an opportunity to offer any testimony, is:

"Then, I will now determine that I have heard enough employee witnesses, both as to the respondent and the intervener.

So, that disposes of that matter."

It is curious enough that this action of the examiner followed repeated prior declarations that he was going to hear the evidence of the 1,200 employees and hear it first (VIII 2561; X, 3956, 3959, 3960). He never did.

No intention to hear either any reasonable number of such a group or to allow any reasonable cross-section of it to testify or use any method to obviate the necessity of hearing all 1,200 employees and yet obtain the substance of their testimony was indicated. The Court of Appeals had pointed out that there were well-known methods of doing this. Even the small amount of testimony actually received was not allowed to extend to the subjects pointed out by the Court of Appeals. The Board simply did not receive the evidence which it was directed to receive.

On the point of considering the evidence, which it was the principal purpose of the second hearing to weigh carefully, the Board and the examiner recited that not only did they admit it but they considered it (X 3848, A. 619), but the mere formal lip service recognition of the direction of the Court of Appeals cannot amount to compliance in actual fact where the opinion and order themselves show conclusively that there was no real compliance. Nowhere in the long opinions of the Examiner or the Board does there appear any discussion or thought given to the substance of the testimony of the employees. The fact of their statement of their desires in the matter, the remarkable fact of the overwhelming number so offering to testify, the substance of their testimony, the bearing of such witnesses as testified upon the stand, the question of whether their testimony was coherent or contradictory, whether the reasons given were persuasive or improbable, the consideration of their credibility—all these and many other possible methods of evaluating testimony of the employees are not even mentioned. The Examiner's belief is that any amount of sworn testimony of any number of employees is worthless (A. 484), which ruling the Board approved.

In addition to simply ignoring it in his mental processes directed toward a final result, the Examiner carried out vigorous flanking attacks upon the minute portions admitted, such as ruling that only such testimony as was specifically designated by a formal offer of proof could be presented in the second hearing (VII 2394, VIII 2784, 2785, 2788, 2802, 2808). There was nothing in the decision of the Court of Appeals to warrant limiting of evidence of the employees narrowly within the exact words of a formal offer of proof. He agreed with the Board's attorneys, who still asserted in the second hearing, that this evidence was immaterial (VII, 2083-4, VIII 2590). He ruled that only those witnesses who had actually signed or were specifically named in an offer of proof could be presented at this hearing (VIII 2802). He limited it to a period going back six months before the formation of the DGWU or to about November, 1936 (VIII 2808, VII 2398), but he permitted the Board and the ILGWU to go into matters going back to 1934 and 1935 (151 Fed. (2d), l. c. 874, VIII 2824, 2887, 2890, IX 3027, 3066). He refused to permit any testimony with reference to matters of operation of the plant union occurring subsequent to July, 1939 (VII 2392, 2397, VIII 2597, X 3764). It would seem beyond argument that if the plant union has continued to operate successfully for seven years and down to the present date, which is the fact, that should be some evidence of its being the choice of the employees. Certainly if it had lasted only a few weeks or a few months after the original trouble, the Board would have considered that as very strong evidence that it was not really the choice of the employees. It mentioned in a footnote that the U. S. District Court found that "the respondent's employees acting unanimously had voluntarily formed the DGWU and at all times freely administered and maintained it" (X 3842), but merely comments this finding was not binding on the Board.

All of these rulings of the Trial Examiner the Board sustained and approved. The internal evidence of the Board's opinion itself shows that the evidence it was directed to weigh and consider was never weighed and considered at all. If opinions do not disclose the processes of reasoning and the matters weighed and considered in reaching the judicial result, then it is worse than useless to write them for they would become actually deceptive as to what law may be relied upon. However, there is no need to rely on what we have termed internal evidence of the opinion. The Board itself clearly and beyond any question describes its own position (A, p. 619):

> "Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily designated the DGWU, we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case." (Italics ours.)

The reviewing court on the second appeal found that this testimony "received no different or greater consideration upon the second hearing than it did upon the first, and that it was disregarded in both hearings." (151 F. (2d) l. c. 873.)

This situation is clear and we think cannot be successfully dismissed or explained away. The Board's method of meeting it is to endeavor to distract attention from it by suggesting that the question is whether "the company and the DGWU were not deprived of due process by reason of the Board's limitation of evidence at the hearing on remand to those matters mentioned by the court below as having been erroneously excluded at the first hearing." (Heading of Board's point No. 3, page 85, its brief, and index p. II.) It thus endeavors to assert that the question for argument is whether the Board acted wrongfully in scrupulously following the instructions of the Court of Appeals.

The picture presented by the Board for consideration is that of the DGWU and Company's attorneys artfully trying to induce the Board to pay no attention to the Court of Appeals; while the Board's attorneys sturdily defend it in its unflinching determination to follow the Court of Appeals' directions to the letter. The fact that the Board's attorneys found it necessary to present this picture upside down to this Court is a revealing light on the weakness of its position. The Board in clear and emphatic language stated that it would not follow the direction of the Court of Appeals on the centrally important issue, nor follow the specific directions of that court as to treating as material the evidence of the employees. Surely the Court of Appeals is an adequate judge of whether its instructions were followed, and its deliberate finding, now here on appeal, is that they were not (151 F. (2d), l. c. 875). As a means of avoiding this issue, the Board devotes many pages to considering whether evidence that employees in other plants, having duties similar to Donnelly instructors, were permitted to belong to other unions, should have been considered by the Board; whether evidence that certain union members were discharged because of their membership was properly admitted; whether evidence comparing the DGWU's contract with the contracts of other labor organizations was properly excluded; whether evidence of alleged violence at other plants was properly excluded, and similar matters. The picture which the Board is trying to paint is that of a large number of minor questions in which the Board earnestly endeavored to follow the complicated instructions from the Court of Appeals and substantially succeeded in doing so, properly using its own discretion where such instructions were not clear. Of course, this is not a true picture. It would have been impossible for the Court of Appeals to have more clearly stated its rulings that the testimony of the employees as to why they formed their union, and whether they were coerced or not, should be treated as material than was done in its opinion. Lengthy arguments as to whether the Board properly ruled on minor matters of evidence can only serve to obscure the issue of the Board's refusal to follow the substance of the court's instructions. The Court of Appeals on the second appeal has held that the Board did not. We submit that all of the Appellate Court's rulings as to evidence and the prejudice of the examiner and the denial of due process were clearly correct. But that over and above all of these, the Board's refusal to follow the court's direction on the central point of the materiality of the employees' testimony is sufficient, standing by itself, to require the setting aside of the Board's order.

See:

St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, 298 U. S. 38, 73, 56 S. Ct. 720, 80 L. Ed. 1033.

Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U. S. 292, 304-305, 57 S. Ct. 724, 81 L. Ed. 1093;

Railroad Commission v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 302 U. S. 388, 393, 58 S. Ct. 344, 82 L. Ed. 319.

Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1, 14, 15, 58 S. Ct. 773, 999, 82 L. Ed. 1129.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 146, 177, 61 S. Ct. 908, 923, 85 L. Ed. 1251.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 218 U. S. 88, 102, 30 S. Ct. 651, 656, 54 L. Ed. 946.

(b) The application of the rule.

We shall argue elsewhere herein that the treating of this large body of important and material evidence as immaterial and irrelevant makes it impossible for the Board to legitimately reach a conclusion that there was substantial evidence in favor of it, because items of evidence cannot be intelligently considered in a vacuum but only in whatever light or explanation is thrown upon them by the other material relevant evidence in the case. We shall submit later on that the refusal to admit and consider this evidence was denial of due process. But in addition to these facts there is a definite and positive principle of law which requires the vacation of the Board's order and the dismissal of its complaint; that is, "The law of the case." The decision of the Court of Appeals as to what evidence is material and must be considered in order to arrive at a valid decision and order in this case is just as much valid, enforceable and settled law as any other decision of an appellate court in a position of direct authority over a trial court. It has the additional value of being explicitly applied to this case, so that doubts as to differences in facts and whether the cases are "on all fours" do not exist. It is the very reason for the existence of an opinion when a case is sent back for rehearing.

The general statement of this doctrine was well put by the Supreme Court in Eastern Cherokees v. United States, 225 U. S. 572, l. c. 582, 32 S. Ct. 707, 56 L. Ed. 1212, l. c. 1216:

> "When a case has been once decided by this court on appeal, and remanded to the Circuit Court, whatever was before this court, and disposed of by its decree, is considered as finally settled. The Circuit > Court is bound by the decree as the law of the case, and must carry it into execution, according to the mandate. That court cannot vary it, or examine it for any other purpose than execution; or give any other or further relief; or review it, even for apparent error, upon any matter decided on appeal; or intermeddle with it, further than to settle so much as has been remanded."

As said in Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Company, 309 U. S. 134, 144, 84 L. Ed. 656, 663, quoting from an opinion of the late Mr. Chief Justice Hughes:

> "'Whether the Commission applies the legislative standards validly set up, whether it acts within the authority conferred or goes beyond it, whether its proceedings satisfy the pertinent demands of due process, whether, in short, there is compliance with the legal requirements which fix the province of the Commission and govern its action are appropriate questions for judicial decision.'" Federal Radio Commission v. Nelson Bros. Bond and Mortg. Co., 289 U. S. 266; 77 L. Ed. 1166, 1174, 53 S. Ct. 627, 89 A. L. R. 406."

Mr. Justice Frankfurter then states:

> "On review the court may thus correct errors of law and on remand the Commission is bound to act upon the correction." (Italics ours.)

The court said in Claiborne-Reno Co. v. E. I. Dupont DeNemours and Co., 77 Fed. (2d) 565, l. c. 566:

> "In the latter case, which is one of the very late cases defining the 'law of the case,' this court in an able opinion by Van Valkenburgh, Circuit Judge, said: 'The phrase "law of the case" has been employed and applied in many decisions of this and other federal courts. Stated generally, the rule is that, "where evidence is substantially the same on both trials, questions of law determined on writ of error or appeal are 'law of the case,' both for trial and appellate court, on second writ of error or appeal." Pennsylvania Mining Co. v. United Mine Workers of America et al., (C. C. A. 8) 28 F. (2d) 851; Thompson v. Maxwell Land-Grant & Railway Co., 168 U. S. 451, 18 S. Ct. 121, 42 L. Ed. 539.' This rule has been announced and received adherence in many decisions of this court." (Citing cases.)

As said in 5 C. J. S., Sec. 1964:

"The doctrine of the law of the case has been applied to decisions of a reviewing court in respect of evidence, as in the case of adjudication on review held to establish the law of the case as to burden of proof and presumptions, and admissibility."

The Court of Appeals went to the trouble of explaining that much time would be saved by admitting evidence rather than indulging in long arguments. (See the record.)

See 123 Fed. (2d) 215, at 223:

"The attitude of this court toward the conduct of hearings by a trial examiner we think has been entirely consistent. In Cupples Co. Manufacturers v. National Labor Relations Board, 8 Cir., 106 F. (2d) 100, 113, we made the suggestion that if a trial examiner would, 'within reasonable limits, permit each of the parties to the proceeding before him to prove his own case, in his own way, by his own counsel,' charges of lack of due process for failure to accord a full and fair hearing could readily be avoided. In Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, supra, 113 F. (2d) 698, 702, we ex> pressed the opinion that the practice which should be followed by a trial examiner in taking evidence and ruling upon objections to evidence is that which applies to special masters in equity proceedings, and 'that the record should contain all evidence offered by any party in interest, except such as is palpably incompetent * * *.'"

Thus the Court of Appeals took occasion to point out with care and detail to the Board and the examiner just what evidence must be taken and given due consideration in order to lay a basis for any valid finding and order. It even went to the unusual length of pointing out to the examiner and the Board a procedure which would avoid a second failure to afford due process, without injuring the Board's case if evidence was admitted beyond a reasonable cross-section of the employees, or such evidence was admitted which turned out to be immaterial or merely cumulative. The Board confessed its inability to make a case when it refused to take the testimony of employees in any substantial manner. Organizers for the International had many months or years in which to talk with these employees, or any of them, and to check and test their testimony and if it found ground to believe that it could make anything favorable to its case out of the examination or cross-examination of any employees, it would surely have made the attempt. Its total abandoning of this field of testimony means that it can make no progress whatever in it. A second time it confessed its inability to make a case when it flatly contradicted the ruling of the Court of Appeals that the testimony of the employees as to their personal knowledge, motives and volition was material. For if it once admitted that such evidence is material and must be considered, together with other evidence and as throwing light on other evidence, it immediately appears that it is so overwhelmingly against the Board's position and so bereft of any infinitesimal item in the Board's favor, that it precludes any decision in favor of the Board.

The intermediate opinion of the examiner adopted in substance by the Board (A, 618) mentions in a footnote (3867) that some of respondents' employees discussed reports of "clashes" at other garment factories and expressed a fear that an "organizational campaign" at the respondents' factory might precipitate similar "strikes" and violence. The impression given is that in carrying on a lawful and even dignified campaign certain minor incidents of impropriety might arise which would be no more the fault of one side than the other. This is an outrageously unfair picture of what really went on. The fact is that all the employees and a majority of the five ex-employees who testified for the Board agreed that this nearby violence was a prime cause of organizing the DGWU. But this universally established fact is never referred to by the Board, which suggests, in a sentence, that all the testimony concerning it, as a cause, is wrong and that it is really evidence of domination because Mrs. Reed is alleged to have mentioned the undeniable fact of violence and the undeniable right to protection, whereupon the Board infers that every employee in the factory immediately loses his or her ability to tell the truth, or the ability to know what causes him or her to take a position on his or her own affairs, or both, and that the management reached a conclusion for them which they all believed (or falsely swore they believed) they reached for themselves. (Except that a majority of five discredited ex-employees, while agreeing that such violence caused the employees in general to organize their own union, yet asserted that they, personally, were not frightened.) We respectfully refer the court to the various opinions of the federal courts, cited, supra, in the injunction cases on this dispute which considered the violence situation and its results in this matter, after hearing many weeks of testimony.

This evidence should have been given due consideration because it established a reason for forming the DGWU. The testimony of both sides established it. If the Board is entitled to try to show that the reason for such formation was the domination of the employer surely it is equally admissible for the intervener to show that the reason was an entirely different one. See Donnelly v. NLRB, 123 Fed. (2d) 215, l. c. 221:

> "The petitioner Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, in the hearing before the examiner, attempted to prove that it was an independent labor organization of all the employees of the Donnelly Garment Company; that the union was organized by and for such employees and was under their exclusive domination and control, and that it at all times had been free from employer domination, interference and support; that the employees believed and had reasonable grounds to believe that the International was resorting to force, violence and threats to compel other employees in other garment plants in Kansas City to join the International and to force their employers to compel them to join it, and was about to attempt to force the employees of the Donnelly Company by the same methods to join the International and that one of the motives which prompted them to form the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union was self-protection."
>
> . . . . . .
>
> "It was not shown that any of the employees of the Donnelly Company whose testimony was offered was under any disqualifying disability. There was no presumption that these employees would commit perjury, and, even if the trial examiner believed that they would perjure themselves, that would not have affected the admissibility of their evidence."

"Evidence is relevant if it tends either to prove or to disprove any issue in a case. We do not say that the trial examiner was required to take the same testimony from 1200 witnesses. There were available to him well-known expedients for limiting the number of witnesses where their testimony was cumulative."

See:

Smyth v. Klauder, 58 Fed. (2d) 109 at 110: "It cannot be varied or examined by the trial court except for the purpose of execution"; certiorari denied, 284 U. S. 681, 76 L. Ed. 575.

Litchfield v. Dubuque, 74 U. S. 270, 19 L. Ed. 150.

Goldwyn Pictures v. Howells Sales, 287 Fed. 100, certiorari denied, 262 U. S. 755, 67 L. Ed. 1217.

In Re Sanford Fork and Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247, 255, 40 L. Ed. 414.

Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 97 Fed. (2d) 513, certiorari denied, 305 U. S. 642, 83 L. Ed. 414.

Henning v. Eldridge, 33 N. E. 754, l. c. 755.

Tribune Co. v. Emery Motor Livery Co., 170 N. E. 772, l. c. 774.

As stated in 5 C. J. S., par. 1964, p. 1501:

"The rule is especially applicable where the appellate court has remanded the cause with specific directions as to the steps to be taken by the lower court, or on further proceedings after answer to certified questions; and such rule holds good regardless of whether the decision of the appellate court is right or wrong, it being said that it is only where the decision is deemed erroneous that the doctrine of 'the law of the case' becomes at all important."

(c) The Indiana and Michigan Electric case.

The case of NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Company, 318 U. S. 9, 87 L. Ed. 579, was cited to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and was referred to by that court in its last decision in this case (Donnelly v. NLRB; DGWU, Intervener, 151 Fed. (2d) 854 at 873). The Board in its brief to this court devotes several pages to consideration of that case (Bd. Bf., pp. 99-192). We believe that applicable to the case at bar in two distinct ways:

First, on the law of the case. In the Indiana and Michigan case, Marks and Freeman, two union members, both of whom had been witnesses against the company, and three others, had engaged in dynamiting the company's transmission poles shortly before the hearing. The company proposed to produce evidence of this fact for the purpose of discrediting the testimony of Marks and Freeman. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the evidence was material (87 L. Ed., l. c. 585), and directed the Labor Board to take and so consider it. The Board refused to do so and on certiorari granted by this court, gave its reasons. It argued that the Court of Appeals was wrong in asserting that a remand might result in the impeachment of Guy, Marks and Freeman, for, say the Board, their "testimony was either cumulative (being corroborated by other witnesses) or entirely immaterial and not relied on by the Board; and that there is other substantial evidence in the record to support the Board's decision" (l. c. 585). This court held that the Board must comply with the directions of the Appellate Court as to evidence, pointing out that even if the Supreme Court did not agree with the Court of Appeals, still the Board would have to follow the direction of the Court of Appeals as to the taking and considering of evidence unless such directions were so far afield as to amount to an abuse of discretion (see page 585):

> "Thus, in order to decide this case in favor of the Board we would have to hold not merely that the evidence of dynamiting would be a matter of indifference in our own view of the case, but that the court designated by statute to exercise discretion in the matter and which desired to know the facts about it before passing on the sufficiency of the evidence and the impartiality of the examiner and which thought the finder of the facts should hear and consider such evidence, must not only have been in error but must also have abused its judicial discretion."

And again at page 591:

> "But the court is given discretion to see that before a party's rights are finally foreclosed, his case has been fairly heard. Findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support, its findings is heard and weighed."

Although the Board discusses the Indiana and Michigan case at length, it does not refer to this important point.

To the same effect is Southport Petroleum Co. v. NLRB, 315 U. S. 100, 86 L. Ed. 718 at 723. This court, therefore, confirmed the power and duty of the Court of Appeals to direct the Board as to what is material evidence in the case appealed to it and to direct the Board not only to take such evidence, but to treat it as material and to place it in the scales on one side to be weighed against conflicting evidence, unless the Court of Appeals was so far wrong in its judgment as to go beyond the discretion conferred upon it as the supervising authority over the Board. We submit that this ruling applies in the case at bar.

Second, on the exclusion of evidence as to violence. As a distinct and separate reason for the consideration of such evidence refused by the Board (I 334q-334v; II 553, 614, 626-627, 700-703, 706, 718y-718bb; III 742d, 758 [offer of proof 1-0000]; VI 1752-1753 [offer of proof refused], 2046-2047) in this case this court in the Indiana and Michigan case pointed out the following situation (87 L. Ed., l. c. 587):

> "We think this course of violence and lawlessness concurrent with the Board proceedings, apparently instigated by those who stand to gain from the Board's decisions, participated in by parties and witnesses, may not be said to lack possible materiality on other issues of the case. The question goes to the fairness of giving absolute finality to the Board's findings of fact where there has been a refusal to hear and incorporate in the record such evidence as may be produced of such a conspiracy."

and again at 591:

> "The remedies of the law are substitutes for violence, not supplements to violence, and it is proper that courts and administrative bodies so employ their discretion as to dispel any belief that use of dynamite will advance legal remedies."

and at page 589:

> "It is unrealistic to say that this union was granted nothing by the Board's order or that no relief has been given to this particular union."

This court also held, at page 587, that:

> "The Board might properly withhold or dismiss its own complaint if it should appear that the charge is so related to a course of violence and destruction, carried on for the purpose of coercing an employer to help herd its employees into the complaining union, as to constitute an abuse of the Board's process." (Also quoted at 151 F. (2d), l. c. 873.)

When the party to a dispute who is asking enforcement or investigation of its position by the Labor Board is definitely associated with unlawful violence, in that identical dispute, it is the duty of the Board and the court to scrutinize the facts in order that its aid shall not be given to violence and lawlessness. Of course, what the complaining witness is guilty of, if anything, has nothing to do with whether the intervenor is or is not a valid union. But this is a different point. To say that the court, by supporting the organizational plans against a certain factory, would not be lending aid and support to lawlessness of a group who employ lawlessness in those very organizational plans, is, as this court has said, simply not realistic. It gives them the great assistance of a department of government ruling against their opponents.

The violence of the International is established. Three courts have so held: See 21 Fed. Supp. 807, l. c. 811, 819, and the conclusion of even the dissenting judge therein at page 831 is to the effect that insofar as misconduct of the International goes an overwhelming case in support of injunction has been made; 151 Fed. (2d) 854 at 873, where the court said "that the charges of misconduct made by the company and the plants union against the International are not without substance is shown by the record"; and 154 Fed. (2d) 45, in which the Court of Appeals denied a permanent injunction because of lack of evidence of present threat and of lack of evidence that the present police force would not or could not control similar outbreaks at the time of the trial some eight years after clearly established violence when the suit was originally filed, and based its finding solely on jurisdictional issues "since we conclude that the trial court's findings against the appellants in this case on issues necessary to its power and jurisdiction to enjoin the appellees are not clearly erroneous, the decree appealed from is affirmed." (Italics ours.)

But the Board argues that the violence used by the International in this case was not dynamiting as in the Indiana and Michigan case; that it was not shown to have been perpetrated by witnesses in this case, but was actively indulged in against employees of nearby companies and not against Donnelly employees.

This is a distinction without a difference.

The reasoning of the Indiana and Michigan case is that any substantial violence (not limited to dynamiting or to witnesses on the stand) which is perpetrated as a part of a campaign to force unionization of a plant or its employees, will not be aided by an arm of the government entertaining a petition calculated to assist the perpetrators in the organizing of that plant. It quotes the Board's finding that "it may be true, as the (company) contends, that many of them (the employees) feared the alleged threats of the ILGWU," but finds that instead of permitting employees to decide for themselves what attitudes they would adopt, the company seized upon such fears to build up and strengthen a militant employee opposition toward that labor organization. The only evidence or testimony it cites in support of this wholly unjustified finding is the opinion of the Board itself. (X 3868-3869).

That the violence in the present case was part of a plan to organize this plant is clear.

In November, 1936, International's president (V 1549) and General Executive Board (X 3677) announced an organizational drive in which their Kansas City office would concentrate on the Donnelly plant (V 1549). Newspaper advertisements stated that the smaller Kansas City plants were being organized in order to get ready for Donnelly's (IV 1336g), and during the violence around those smaller plants the pickets made statements to the same effect (IV 1336vvv). Miss Tobin, manager of International's local organizations in Kansas City (IV 1318), while a beating was being administered to an elderly woman in front of other Kansas City plants, stated that this was just a sample of what they were going to do at Donnelly's (II 718z). Mr. Dubinsky testified that the full page advertisement of the International addressed to the Donnelly Company had and has his approval. That advertisement stated that the International "cannot, should not and will not permit one individual employer to segregate itself," and that

> "It still lies within your choice to avoid a conflict which may prove as costly as it appears futile at this stage to all sides involved in it. Your readiness to meet us in this endeavor in a spirit of industrial statesmanship rather than in that guerrilla warfare will be applauded by every constructive factor in the dress industry in general the country over" (V 1534-4.)

Justice, the organ of the International, announced that the union "is now concentrating on organizing the few remaining small shops while preparing to organize a drive to organize the Donnelly Garment Company" (V 1519), and that "David Dubinsky, president of the ILGWU, on Saturday, March 6, officially launched a movement to organize the Donnelly Garment Company" (V 1521). Mr. Dubinsky gave an interview to the Associated Press in which he stated that the St. Louis office of the International would have sufficed for Missouri except that the union "wants to give Jim Reed a break" (V 1549). Numerous other exhibits demonstrating that the main object of violence in Kansas City was the unionization of the Donnelly employees appear in the record (V 1417 to 1583 and XI). No efforts to negotiate were ever addressed by the international to the employees, but only to the management. The Regional Director for the International stated that the same actions would be taken against Donnelly employees, if the court did not issue an injunction (V 1510-11). It may be that this evidence is not sufficient to enjoin the officers and all members of the board of the International under the narrow provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act as to personal authorization, present threat, inability of police force, etc., but it surely shows that the campaign of the International in Kansas City was directed toward the forcible organization of the Donnelly employees.

If the violence of the International directed toward the organization of these employees by for is aided by the Boards dissolving of its opposition (the DGWU), then the violence has been successful and an appropriate and paying procedure. A labor group may use unlawful violence and the aid of the Labor Board at the same time and in the same campaign.

(d) The effect of the Administrative Procedure Act.

The Court of Appeals had ample authority under the law to set aside the order of the Labor Board in this case. Such authority springs not only from the express provisions of the National Labor Relations Act (29 U. S. C. 160, e, f), but also from fundamental principles of common law, which are fully discussed in the opinion of that court and are the subject of a substantial part of this brief. Since that opinion was rendered, the power and duty of appellate courts to set aside orders and findings reached without due process—as is the situation here—has been substantially extended and clarified by the Administrative Procedure Act (Chapter 324, Laws of 79th Congress, Second Session, Public Law 404, approved on June 11, 1946). The parts of that Act herein relied on became effective on September 11, 1946. Its provisions as to the review by the courts of orders of administrative agencies read as follows:

> "(e) Scope of review.—So far as necessary to decision and where presented the reviewing court shall decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of any agency action. It shall (A) compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed; and (B) hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be (1) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law; (2) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege, or immunity; (3) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right; (4) without observance of procedure required by law; (5) unsupported by substantial evidence in any case subject to the requirements of Sections 7 and 8 or otherwise reviewed on the record of an agency hearing provided by statute; or (6) unwarranted by the facts to the extent that the facts are subject to trial de novo by the reviewing court. In making the foregoing determinations the court shall review the whole record or such portions thereof as may be cited by any party, and due account shall be taken of the rule of prejudicial error."

It is to be noted that the reviewing court shall decide all relevant questions of law, which certainly include the admissibility of competent and material evidence and whether evidence is material, and that such appellate court is to interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, which includes due process. The appellate court is directed to "hold unlawful and set aside agency action" which does not measure up to the requirements of due process. It is submitted that "set aside" as herein used means "set aside" and nothing more. It does not direct further hearings nor substitute orders, but leaves the agency with its petition denied. This course of action is especially appropriate where the agency has flatly refused to follow the instructions given to it in the same case by the court with supervisory powers and has stated its decision not to proceed in accordance therewith and, by implication, admitted that it could not possibly make a case by proceeding in accord with such instructions (that is, in this case, the taking and considering as material evidence the testimony of the employees, either in total or in any reasonable cross-section). The six grounds listed in the quoted paragraph and the general requirement as to prejudicial error may be urged to have been recognized parts of the law before this Act was passed. Indeed, the Court of Appeals opinion relies on some of them. Yet the statute will not be construed to be meaningless where there is a reasonable interpretation. Surely one purpose, if not the predominating and sole purpose, of the statute was to make clear, especially because of some court decisions which exhibited a contrary or at least a doubtful idea, that these constitutional and fundamental requirements are to be fully and definitely enforced in dealing with findings and orders of administrative agencies, including the Labor Board.

So considered—and we are at a loss to see how it could be considered in any other manner—the Act declares a public policy of enforcing these principles, through the supervision of appellate courts, without any relaxation in favor of administrative bureaus, and removes any possible shadow of doubt that the order made by the Court of Appeals was properly entered. The debates on the bill before Congress show that it was passed with this definite and express purpose in the minds of the legislators. (See quotations in the appendix to this brief.)

The International relies heavily in its brief in the last part of point one (International's brief, page .....) on inference as justifiable support for the decisions of administrative agencies. It quotes language indicating that "inferences to be drawn are for the Board and not the courts" and that inferences drawn by the Board will not be disturbed by the court even though contrary inferences could have been drawn. We submit that these cases do not hold that inferences drawn by the Board must or should be sustained when to do so requires that positive, direct and material testimony to the contrary from witnesses who are not impeached or discredited must be completely disregarded in order to sustain such inferences. However, in any case we think the Federal Administrative Procedure Act has declared and clarified the policy of Congress as to the direction and supervision of administrative agencies so that no such contention as that of the Board and the International can be sustained. The International's brief argues that Congress could grant such scope of review of administrative board findings to the courts as we claim, but that it has not done so. The Federal Administrative Procedure Act has made the grant of such scope of review clear.

III.

The findings of fact by the Board are not supported by substantial evidence.

(a) The findings are based on inference and suspicion.

The Board has devoted the major portion of its brief and all of Point I of its Argument to a defense of its findings. Elsewhere herein we have quoted from cases pointing out that neither a trial court nor an administrative agency is free to disregard direct testimony, by relying merely on suspicion. It would seem logical that if the law regards the unimpeached positive testimony of an uncontradicted witness who knows the facts as prevailing over mere inference or conclusions drawn from secondary facts, then the similar testimony of some 1,200 witnesses without exception would require a veritable mountain of inferences and testimony about secondary facts from which conclusions may be drawn but which do not in themselves determine the issue, in order to have any hope of raising some shadow of doubt. The Board apparently agrees with this for it has used in its brief an appalling number of citations, perhaps with the idea that it will produce the impression of a mountain of evidence, even though it be a combination of inference and secondary facts, and even though a large part of it is outweighed by a much larger body of evidence flatly to the contrary. We ask the court's consideration of the nature of these citations, which will demonstrate that they are far from being a mountain of evidence and far from being "substantial."

An examination of the Board's and the International's citations show that they fall into five classes:

(1) The citation of its own findings as evidence in support of their correctness. The Board cites its own findings more than 225 times, often with no supporting evidence (36 times), and sometimes with preliminary statements that "as the Board found," etc., and sometimes without such explanation. The International also relies heavily on the Board's findings as evidence to support their correctness (X 3837-3898 is the Board's findings).

(2) Citations to facts which are noncontroversial and throw no light on the questions involved, such as the dates on which actions were filed, the names of witnesses who testified, etc.

(3) Citations of testimony of employees to the effect that they never considered Rose Todd or Hobart Atherton as representing the employer or having any supervisory powers or speeches of employees or actions in meetings to the effect that they desired their own union, etc., as inferentially proving the opposite of what they say.

(4) Citations to the NRA hearings held before the National Labor Relations Act was passed.

(5) References to the testimony of the seven ex-employees in two hearings of about six weeks each. These ex-employees recite personal grievances against their co-employees or against the Company, readily admitting bias or even hatred, and that their memories as to dates, exact hours and statements occurring five years before the second hearing were refreshed only about a week before that hearing by representatives of the Board or the International. We have commented elsewhere in detail and with repetition on the testimony of these witnesses because it is actually the Board's case and because of the peculiar fact that their testimony also recognized that as to the fact for the ascertainment for which the case was remanded for rehearing, they clearly support the position of the DGWU. In other words, they agree (with one exception) that when they previously stated that the plant union was the free and voluntary choice of the employees, they were telling the truth. They agree that the belief that the formation of the plant union would substantially aid the employees in protecting themselves against the violence being perpetrated by the International against employees of nearby smaller plants and threatened against these employees, was held by the employees generally. Their contrary evidence five years later is that they personally did not fear such violences; that they signed everything they were asked to sign although nobody in any way forced them to do so; that they now feel the employees or they themselves did not exercise their best judgment that they felt that is they did not join the plant union they might not have a job since if the plant union secured a closed shop they would have to belong to it in order to work, and that (in the case of one Board witness) she joined the International on the same day on which she made a statement in favor of or joined the DGWU, and for a time secretly reported such facts as she could gather about the DGWU to the International. In spite of the hundreds of citations, this is the Board's case.

The Board states on page 10 of its brief, "The Board thereupon called several of the 1,200 employees who testified contrary to the offer of proof," and cites 22 references covering 81 pages in the record. The fact is that no employee ever testified contrary to the offer of proof.

This testimony was offered by the Board as evidence in rebuttal of the evidence of the Company and the intervener (IX 3277), but is now being cited by the Board as being in contradiction to evidence which the intervener and the Company were not allowed to introduce. The offer of proof which the Board claims this evidence refutes was refused by the trial examiner (III 743).

The first four citations used by the Board in support of its statement above cover four pages of the record and refer to lists of names on the Company's offer of proof, Exhibit 1-00000.

The next citation, covering nine pages in the record, refers to testimony of Dorsey, an ex-employee, and which contains no contradiction to the offer of proof and some arguments by the trial examiner and the attorneys. The balance of the references are to more testimony by Dorsey and testimony of Skeens, Copenhaver, Weilert and Stevens, all ex-employees of the Company, who are discussed hereinafter. The offer of proof (III 743-763) includes statements of many details as to hours of meetings, Loyalty League, no pressure to attend meetings, etc. If the Board means that five ex-employees testified contrary to some unspecified detail or details included in this offer of proof, we think it should so state. Their explicit or tacit admission that the affidavit (VI 1677 to 1749) and the substance of this offer of proof are true—that is, the choice of the DGWU by the overwhelming majority of the employees—is clear.

At the start of Part One of its Argument to this court, the Board attempts to establish that its findings as to the supervisory or management status of various employees is based on "strong and compelling evidence." To prove this point it begins by considering various subsidiary matters, such as: "1: Instructors and thread girls" (p.

23). The trial examiner in the first hearing rejected the proffered evidence that the locals of the ILGWU, at least in this section of the country, admitted to membership employees from other garment factories who did comparable work and had similar titles to the instructors and thread girls at the Donnelly plant. The court below was of the opinion (151 F. (2d), l. c. 874-5) that this offer of proof should not have been rejected. The Board in its brief (pp. 20-21) still contends that such evidence "was only remotely relevant or wholly immaterial to any issue in this case." The Board found "that the instructors and thread girls are supervisory employees and that they act for the management in the factory" (p. 27, Bd. Br., X 3854), and an analysis of its citations to the record shows that it has based its finding on scant and unreliable evidence. Its 118 citations under this specific point fall into the general classifications of: to its own findings, 23; to uncontradicted matter, 16 (its first 14 citations fall into this category); to testimony of discredited witnesses, 31 (that is, citations falling between IX 3426 and X 3708); to "NRA and JMC" testimony, 20, most of which testimony was given in 1935, and was as to acts prior to the National Labor Relations Act (citations to Record III 1032 to IV 1300). We find that of the testimony falling outside these general classifications, the Board has relied heavily upon that of Jessie Mudd, a thread girl, for it cites her testimony ten different times: 2963-67, 2959, 2963-64, 2959-60, 2956-57, 2949-55, 2957-60, 2963-65, 2967, 2962. The Board, however, found it necessary to omit her testimony after its statement that "the thread girls assume charge whenever the instructors are absent" (Br., p. 25), for Jessie Mudd, a thread girl herself, testifies to the direct opposite (VIII 2960). It relies instead upon statements by two ex-employees and upon testimony in the 1935 NRA hearing, and of one Garrett, who was not a thread girl and whose testimony was not that the thread girls were in charge, but was that when the instructors were "absent for a very short period" then "the thread girl handed us work" (IX 3193). She did not consider an instructor to be a supervisor (3146). Does the Board infer from this statement that handing work to operators made thread girls instructors or that this action identifies such employees as holding positions of authority?

When the Board finds that the instructors had the power to "discipline girls," it cites its own findings twice and shows that they are supported by six citations to the 1935 NRA hearing as to conditions before the NLRA was enacted and two years before the DGWU was organized, and by testimony of Skeens (a disgruntled ex-employee), whose statement on the cited page is, "We disciplined in a way. We had to see that they didn't talk too much or—" (IX 3464).

The Board states, page 27 in its brief, that the instructors regard themselves as "supervisors" and were so regarded by the employees. The only testimony cited to support this is that of the four disgruntled ex-employees, and of one other, whose testimony is that she considered the instructor at two other plants, Liberty Garment Co. and Brooks, as supervisors (VIII 2604), but at no place does she state that the Donnelly instructors were considered by her as supervisors. There is much testimony to the contrary.

The Board to bolster its finding that instructors are supervisors selects a quotation from the testimony of Mrs. Hyde (II 423) but rejects her testimony on succeeding pages (II 425) that Mr. Baty and Mrs. Hyde were the only persons that have anything to do with hiring and discharging employees and on page 426 that instructors do not have "any authority to order or discipline or fire people that work in their sections."

The Board concludes its argument on this point by the statement that the functions of the instructors and thread girls "* * * fall entirely within the accepted definition of foreman, whose duties often include teaching or instructing their subordinates" (Bd. Bf. 27-28). The fact that the instructors' duties were "teaching and instructing," is admitted, and evidently that is actually what the Board found that the Donnelly instructors did. Does the Board mean that no further attributes of a supervisor are necessary to make an employee the representative of management? The Board found that the instructor and thread girls were the management's representatives. From an analysis of the Board's citations to the record, we shall urge that even by basing its findings on the testimony as to acts in 1935, and on statements by six seriously prejudiced ex-employees, and by picking out of the testimony of other witnesses only those pieces of testimony that it wishes and disregarding testimony of the same witness on other points, still it has not shown that this finding is based on more than a mere scintilla of evidence. Certainly it is contrary to the understanding of the administrative officers and fully 98% of the employees (III, 743-763 at 759, 761). The instructors or thread girls never gave any instructions as to going to meetings nor had any authority to do so and never herded their fellow employees to meetings (X, 3720; 3725, 3714, 3734, 3735, 3738, 3739, 3743, 3762, 3765, 3769, 3778 3774, 3777, 3779).

The Board's brief at page 23 states that "the Board was certainly entitled to base its decision on the role actually played by the supervisory employees rather than upon their titles" and cites the case of Cupples Company

v. NLRB, 106 Fed. (2d) 100, 114, as explaining this statement. In the Cupples case the court held that the title was unimportant and even though she (Miss Weitzel) was known as a "forelady" or "supervisor" there was nothing in the evidence to show that as far as her activities relating to the union were concerned she represented the Company. The assumption of the employees or her own representations were unimportant. The cease and desist order of the Board was set aside and the order to reinstate employees was vacated. See page 114:

> "The Board contends that, since Irene Weitzel was shown to have been regarded and referred to as a 'forelady' or 'supervisor,' a finding that her interference and domination in connection with the formation of the Association was the interference and domination of the employer was justified. It seems to us that the question of her title is unimportant and that the vital question is whether, under the evidence, she was or could reasonably be found to be the representative of the Company in connection with her activities relating to the two labor unions."

Quoting from page 115:

> "There is no evidence in the record that Miss Weitzel was ever held out by the Company as a person having authority to advise others with respect to joining or not joining labor organizations. What her fellow-employees of the match department may have assumed her authority to be and what she may have represented it to be, we regard as unimportant in so far as the Company is concerned, since there is no proof that her acts which are complained of were done at its direction or with its knowledge or consent. It would be strange if the efforts of the employees of the petitioner to organize and to select representatives for collective bargaining could be utterly frustrated and destroyed through attributing the acts of one of their number—who, so far as the record shows, was eligible to membership in both the Association and the Matchworkers' Union—to the employer, without any showing that the employer had ever authorized, consented to, or was aware of such acts."

To show that it is empowered to hold the Company responsible for the acts of its supervisory employees, the Board has cited three cases decided by this court.

In the H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB case, 311 U. S. 514, the Company did not seriously dispute or challenge, as we have here, the finding by the Board that the employees who solicited on behalf of the union, were supervisors and were representatives of the management. The Company's contention was that, not knowing of their acts, it was not chargeable with them.

In the International Machinists case (311 U. S. 72) it was also held that the employer had "assisted" the International to enroll a majority of its employees into that union as against the UAW, even though the Company did not expressly authorize those whom the Board found to be management representatives, to assist in this effort. The court also noted that these same employees had been closely connected with the previous plant union. Here the old Company union had been dissolved, after which there was an electioneering campaign between the International and the UAW; and an election. The defeated UAW charged that due to the Company's unfair labor practices, the International was not the uncoerced choice of the majority of the toolroom employees. In that case the Board did not have before it the direct testimony of every employee who was permitted to testify on the point, and the offer of proof of all the others, that the union to which they belonged was their free will choice, as in the case at bar.

The Link-Belt Co. case, 311 U. S. 584, again deals, as have the other two, with dissolved plant unions and the origin of a new union. The leader of the old Independent union testified that he was dismayed when the Wagner Act was declared by this court to be constitutional. Certainly that is the direct opposite of the case at bar, where the Donnelly employees testify that the announcement that the NLRA was constitutional was hailed with joy, because it preserved to them the right to organize their own union, and has fought throughout the years to maintain that right. In that case it was shown that the foreman had signed for illiterate employees and it was not denied that the night boss also solicited for the Independent. In the case at bar, at an open meeting of all employees the organization of the union was explained to them, and each was given the opportunity to take all the time necessary to give due consideration to the matter before becoming a member of the union. There were no illiterates. Also here it is not the fact that anyone with supervisory powers solicited for the DGWU.

The Board's next subtitle is "2. Rose Todd." The Board's finding is "* * * that Rose Todd occupied a close and confidential position with the respondent and further finds that in such postion she was acting for and on behalf of the respondent" (X 3858). However, in its brief the Board has narrowed down this finding and has restricted it to "her labor relations activities." The full quotation is "It was well within the Board's competence to find, as it did, that in her labor relations activities Todd 'was acting for and on behalf of' the Company (X 3858)" (Bd's Br., p. 31). Analyzing the citations used by the Board in its brief to support this finding, we discover that it has used 12 citations to its findings (4 without supporting evidence); 9 are used for trivial or uncontradicted statements, such as "Upon returning to the Company's employ she worked for a while as a thread girl"; and 6 to that of ex-employees shown elsewhere to be entirely discredited witnesses; and further that it has relied chiefly upon Rose Todd's own testimony, which it cites 12 times. Nevertheless it rejects all of her testimony as to the chief question in this case, that of the free will choice of the Donnelly employees. The Board also used 10 or more references to exhibits, from which it proceeds to draw inferences and assumptions, and then state them as facts. An illustration of this is at the close of the first paragraph at the top of page 31 of its brief. Here there are 7 references to payroll records in support of—what should be labeled the Board's findings—that the Company thereby recognized "that her activities in connection with the DGWU were performed as a part of her duties for the Company."

The Board again states that "Todd apparently had no well-defined duties * * *." However, in its Findings of Fact, it describes in detail her duties (X 3855-3856).

We have chosen two illustrations of the attempt by the Board to convey to this court the impression that Todd was tied up with the management of the Donnelly Company, by stating as facts, incidents which, trivial in themselves, sound when put into the Board's words, as though they were important facts. First, it is stated that her duties "* * * required her frequently * * * to interview the instructors and thread girls," and cites only the testimony Todd herself at I 24-24a, and 29, to support the finding at X 3856. This is an exaggerated premise to draw from Todd's answers to the questions put to her by the Board's attorney:

"Q. Is it not true, Miss Witness, that in your duties at the plant, at present, that you do go around and talk to practically all of the instructors almost daily? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you talk to almost all of these girls in addition? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know (do) any employee at the plant whose duties carry them to more places in the plant daily than you? A. Well, that is rather a broad question. Mr. Baty would certainly be through the plant every day, but, of course, you take your basket boys, anybody that is supplying work to that plant, the size it is, would have to be through it. We have errand girls from various floors, have pick-up boys. I could name any number of people that go through that plant all day long. We have a pick-up system that two boys, that is all they do all day long, is go through the plant.

Q. They are messenger boys? A. Take our thread girls there, that work necessarily takes them, going from one department to the other, notion department and pressing department" (I 29).

The connotation of "interviewing" is entirely apart from the "talking" which she indicates, in the above testimony, to have had with the employees of that plant.

Second: is the statement that "* * * she often lunched in the Company's private dining room which was reserved for executives and supervisory personnel" (Bd.'s Br., p. 30). In the first place the "private dining room" referred to, according to May Stevens' whose testimony is the only one cited in support of this fictitious statement, is a "little room built at the end of the cafeteria" and she states "the instructors ate in that little room."

Farther on (X 3675) when Mrs. Stevens is asked "* * * did you ever see Rose Todd eating lunch?" and the further question "Where did she eat?" she testifies that "She (Todd) ate in that little room and at various places up on the floor of the cafeteria."

The record is replete with testimony of the employees themselves, plus the Offer of Proof which was rejected, that Rose Todd spoke for, and was the representative of, the employees; and that it was upon their behalf she worked for the organization of the DGWU and in its interests after its organization. All of this testimony the Board ignored, although it found it necessary to base its findings to the contrary, upon mere shreds of testimony and unusual inferences therefrom. We shall maintain that it is not within the Board's "competence" or authority to base its findings upon such inferences, when there is in the record the positive testimony of all who know the facts that Rose Todd was acting for and on behalf of the employees.

In "spot checking" the Board's citations of evidence supporting its findings, we next examine the Board's statements on pages 34 to 37 of its brief, regarding the Company's opposition to the 1934 campaign of the ILGWU. It will be remembered that the DGWU was organized in 1937, three years after the 1934 campaign, and that the original complaint was filed with the NLRB in 1939, or five years after the 1934 campaign. In this portion of its brief, the Board uses 26 citations to its findings and 92 references to the testimony taken in the "NRA" and "JMC" hearings; plus three citations of the testimony of discredited witnesses upon the point that Mrs. Gray was "* * * manager of the Company's retail outlet store, * * *."

A casual reading of this point gives the impression that the Board has testimony to support a great many of its findings, nevertheless an analysis of its citations discloses that it refers sixteen times to one page of its findings, i. e. X 3860.

Solely upon the testimony which the trial examiner did not himself hear, it being made available to him entirely through transcript, the Board states on page 37 of its brief, that he found "on the testimony of some of the employees, that as a result of the sequence of events above related, employees became afraid to join, admit their membership in, or discuss the ILGWU." The direct testimony which the trial examiner did hear of all whom he permitted to testify on the point, plus the rejected Offer of Proof, was that whatever fear which was engendered in the employees was the result of ILGWU'S activities; and definitely that the employees were in fear of the electioneering campaign of violence which the International used in 1937 against workers at other garment factories in Kansas City, and which it said was to be used as a spearhead against the Donnelly employees. The employees' testimony was just as convincing also that no pressure was ever exerted upon them by the Company or anyone whom they considered to be the representative of the Company. (Offer of Proof III 756, 757.)

We think the Board uses an incorrect term in discussion of the "Loyalty Petition." On pp. 41-43 of its brief it has referred ten times to a "pledge" of the employees. At every place where it is mentioned in the record, not only in the citations shown by the Board, but at all other places, it is called, what in fact it is, a Loyalty Petition, and not a pledge. There is one exception to this general statement and that is in the trial examiner's findings, where it is referred to by him interchangeably as a petition or a pledge. There is nothing in the Loyalty Petition, which is quoted in full on page 41 of the Board's brief, that even by indirection or by inference could be construed to be a "pledge." An expression of satisfaction and a refusal "to acknowledge any labor union organization" in the present tense involves no pledge whatever.

The Board argues in point D-2 on page 58 and 59 of their brief that there was no representative of the DGWU on the piecework committee. The truth is that the president of the DGWU had to approve any piece rate before it could be put into effect (VII, 2399); that there was adequate machinery within the union to protest and adjust any unsatisfactory rates (I, 113, 114; II, 716, 718g); and that many such adjustments were handled by the DGWU (VII, 2159-61; I, 113-114; II, 716, 718g); that some adjustments were made over the heads of this committee (VII, 2158).

Donnelly Garment Workers' Union has had a practice from its origin of reimbursing its members for time spent on union business which might cause them to lose pay, and the Company has deducted for time lost because of such activities (Vol. X 3764-6, 3767, 3770, 3772, 3774, 3778-9).

The examiner for the Board found that there was no meeting about the end of March or the first of April (X 3873, footnote) in the face of the fact that 18 witnesses testified positively that a meeting was held at that time and recited what was done at it, while, on the other hand, one Board witness testified that she did not know of any such meeting, "There never was no such meeting to my knowledge" (I 332). At the second hearing one Board witness did not remember whether the employees raised a fund for the attorney prior to April 27th (IX 3316); two testified they never heard of the attorney before April 27th (IX-3432; X 3552), and one said she paid 50 cents in May (X 3671). The Board argues that this is a reasonable weighing of the evidence on the ground that it would be inconsistent to hold such a meeting because money had already been borrowed to pay the attorney a retainer (X 3873, footnote). But the money borrowed from the bank was with the specific plan of repayment by collections from the employees and this was in fact done, which surely makes such action highly consistent instead of inconsistent. The Board also urges that it is unlikely that the meeting occurred because there is testimony that Rose Todd explained about the committee at that meeting, whereas the minutes of April 27th show that she explained about the same thing on April 27th and that there are no written minutes on the meeting at the end of March or the first part of April. In other words, the Board is perfectly ready to disbelieve any number of witnesses who have in no way been impeached on the strength of one witness who says she does not know whether the fact occurred or not and on inferences which are, at least, as consistent with the testimony as inconsistent with it. This method of dealing with the evidence is characteristic throughout the findings.

The International, on page ..... of its brief, twice resorts to a remarkable use of inferences. The first is its statement that the court's opinion shows that "beyond all cavil" the "findings of the trial examiner are supported by substantial evidence (XIII 8-25), whereas these comments the court had denominated as "the facts which the Board contends are established by the evidence." The court had just as conscientiously set out the facts which the DGWU and the Company contend are established by the evidence. The International evidently infers that the mere inclusion in detail of the Board's findings in the court's comment is sufficient to show that they "are supported by substantial evidence," and further infers that that court found that the contentions of the DGWU and the Company were not supported. The more logical conclusion is that the court included these two statements to support its own mandate which denied enforcement of the Board's order "* * * for want of due process in the proceeding upon which the order is based" (l. c. 875). Certainly it is fallacious to infer that the detailed recital of the findings and contentions of the Board shows that the court (in its opinion) found "that the findings of the trial examiner are supported by substantial evidence."

The International follows the above inference with a still stronger one after quoting the court's comments on this picture drawn by the International it assumes that this "* * * comes very nearly holding that the findings of the examiner in this case were supported by substantial evidence * * *." Evidently, the Internatoinal believes that if the Board in its competency can look behind what the employees say and decide that the employees are dominated, although all of them say that they were not, then it, the International, can look behind the two pictures which the court draws, one on behalf of the employees and the other on behalf of the Board and the International, and, by inferring that the court disregarded the former, arrive at the statement that the court "very nearly held that there was substantial evidence to support the findings."

In the first hearing the Board opened up its case by putting the chairman of the executive committee of the DGWU on the witness stand, and without anything which could be called direct examination preceding, cross-examined her for five days. The examiner took a vigorous part. This was followed by many days of examination of the minutes of the DGWU, of its bank account and of an official of the Kansas City Chair Company who testified that chairs for union meetings and for the Donnelly Company had been carried under the same heading for some time. He also testified that the chair company had no system of bookkeeping worthy of the name until about August, 1938, and that the accounts might well have been carried as they were as a matter of the chair company's convenience. They all went to the same building and to an organization the first name of which was "Donnelly." Out of some 20 to 30 meetings a few receipted bills for chair rental had been lost, but the evidence of both employer and the DGWU officers was positive that the company had never paid rental for any chairs to be used at a union meeting and that the union had paid every bill they had received for such rental. Absolutely nobody testified that the company had ever paid chair rental for the union. Thus it soon developed that the Board had no case and that it was proceeding on the theory that if you cross-examine enough people, long enough, on enough different subjects you would finally elicit evidence that some out of many meetings years ago had begun before working hours were over, or at least that some persons would so testify, or that some company facilities had been used by officers of the union, or some similar fact, and that if three or four witnesses could be found whose memory disagreed with that of everyone else the Board would always accept the minority. Their only witness on the merits, Elsa Lou Greenhaw, was so completely discredited that after the examiner's first opinion, which relied on her as being able to outweigh all other witnesses (A 519), she was never mentioned again. This theory of procedure can only be valid if the law is that if some scintilla of evidence favorable to the complainant can be developed it may be considered alone without any regard to the over-all picture and a result based upon it. But this is not the law. If Mrs. Reed did express an opinion that violence should not decide union affiliation at a time when the plant was threatened with what the courts have determined was unlawful violence, it would seem clear such comment was within the right of free speech, (see Edward G. Budd Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, 142 Fed. (2d) 922), and in any case should not bind the employees where it is clear that their action is the result of their own convictions.

(b) The Board's witnesses.

But in its second hearing the Board had full information as to what was required in order to make a case. It produced witnesses of its own—six of them. Although produced in rebuttal, in spite of the fact that the Board has the burden of proof, we should perhaps consider whether the Board is getting around to making an affirmative case. Let us consider the substance of the testimony of these witnesses for the Board.

Of these six witnesses, Mrs. Keyes was not an employee in the sense the word has been generally used in this litigation. She was office manager handling finances until the spring of 1938 (X p. 3640) and since then operating a clothing factory in Kansas City which produces sportswear and a defense garment (X 3661). She knew "nothing whatsoever of the union activities in the Donnelly Garment Company" (X 3660), and believes the testimony of Mr. Keyes that so far as he knows no official or person with authority ever advised or suggested to any employees that they should join the DGWU or stay out of the International, was true. (X 3660-1). She stated that since the year 1932 no one in the firm of Gossett, Ellis, Dietrich & Tyler had been employed on legal work by the Donnelly Garment Company (X 3661).

As for the remaining five witnesses, to consider their testimony as evidence which a reasonable mind could accept in the light of all the evidence as establishing that the employees were dominated in their organization of the union is simply absurd. To begin with, all but one of them stated that they don't believe it themselves, although it is the ultimate fact they were put on the stand to prove. In reference to the affidavit that the DGWU was the free voluntary considered wish and choice of the employees who signed and that they did not want to belong to the International or any other union and earnestly urged a secret election to further demonstrate that fact, which affidavit was sworn to by some 1,100 signers (see Vol. VI, p. 1677 to 1749, inclusive). Etta Dorsey, whose signature appears on the second line on page 1689, testifies as follows (Vol. IX, 3383):

> "Q. Was the affidavit at the time you signed and swore to it true or false so far as you are concerned? A. True."

Lola Skeens testified as follows (IX 3462):

> "Q. I'll hand you intervener's Exhibit No. 20 and ask if that is your signature that appears on page 6060 of the Circuit Court record? A. Yes, that is my signature.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> "Mr. Ingraham: Now, it is stated in this affidavit, 'each signer hereby further states that he or she has read or had read to him or her the contents of this affidavit.' Do you recall reading the affidavit, Mrs. Skeens? A. Yes."

And at (3463):

"And were the facts stated therein true? A. Yes."

Geneva Copenhaver avoided answering the question as to whether she was threatened or dominated or believed the employees were not acting of their own free will for many pages but rather reluctantly committed herself as follows (3492 and on 3501):

> "Q. Well, do you consider there are parts of it that are true and parts of it that are false? A. No; but as I read that, the way I understand it, that we signed that as more or less of a petition to prove that (fol. 6209) we had joined the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union under our own free will.
>
> "Q. Well, that part of the affidavit, then, you consider true, is that right? A. To the extent that I wasn't threatened in any way, or forced by any means into signing a card or signing my name into the union—to join the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union.
>
> A. It was my free and voluntary act to the extent that I wasn't threatened in any way to sign that card—forced in any way. They didn't force me or threaten me, or anything, to make me join that union at any time."

She suggested that she did have the feeling that if she didn't sign she might not have a job but the only explanation for that impression she could give was the fact that she knew a closed shop was contemplated as a demand on the employer and that if it was obtained she realized that only union members would be employed (X 3529):

> "Q. Did you ever hear of a closed shop contract between the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union and the Donnelly Company? A. Yes, I have heard that mentioned.
>
> Q. And don't you know that a closed shop agreement is an agreement by which the employees who are eligible for that union must belong to the union which has the closed shop agreement? A. I don't know that I ever had it explained to me.

Q. Did you hear it discussed in the meeting of May 11, 1937? A. Closed shop agreement?

Q. Yes. A. I don't remember.

Q. Didn't you hear it discussed by the members of the executive committee and by Rose Todd that they contemplated asking the Donnelly Garment Company for a closed shop contract? A. I don't remember.

Q. And wasn't it explained in that meeting, if they got a closed shop contract, everybody in the Company eligible (fol. 6270) for membership in the union would have to belong to the union? A. That's the way I got it."

Mrs. Weilert agreed that when the DGWU was formed she believed it was in response to the voluntary action of the employees (X 3581):

"Q. Now, Mrs. Weilert, you stated that when the union was formed you thought that it was an organization formed by the voluntary action of the employees? A. Yes."

It developed that her husband had written a letter at her dictation repeating the assertion that her action in union matters was voluntary and according to her own wishes (Vol. X, p. 3591 and 3600).

May Stevens flatly stated that she committed perjury when she swore that the DGWU was her own choice. See p. 3690:

"Q. I will ask you to note the last paragraph, which says:

'The undersigned state that they are members of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, and joined said union and have at all times since remained members thereof solely of their own free will, choice and preference, and that they have not been influenced by any threats, coercion or pressure of their employer or any representative of said employer, and that they have no knowledge of any incidents in which the employer or any representative of the employer has exerted pressure, intimidation, coercion or (fol. 6632) any other influence upon the undersigned or any other employees to join the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, or to stay out of any other labor union.'

Was that true or false at the time you made it? A. It was false.

Q. At the time you made it it was false, is that your answer? A. As to my state of mind about it."

And at p. 3703:

"By Mr. Hogsett:

Q. I think I understood your answer to Mr. Tyler, but I want to be very sure about it. Did you tell him that when you signed this affidavit on the 2nd of June, 1939, which he showed you and which appears on page 6090 of the record, that you knew that you were swearing to a false affidavit? A. I did."

. . . . . .

She gives no evidence or reason for her feeling that there was pressure, but her secret relations with the International hereinafter mentioned explain it completely. She was not permitted by the examiner to answer the question as to whether her husband was an organizer for a labor union (R. 3683; offer of proof 3685).

This is, of course, an astounding sort of evidence upon which to base a request that any fact-finding body find that hundreds of reputable, unimpeached witnesses are not telling the truth. The reason for its existence develops quickly and unmistakably. Each and every one of these five witnesses at the time of or after their discharge or resignation had various resentments, quarrels or hatreds toward the Company or the DGWU and appreciated an opportunity to express their resentment. Their personal complaint about the nature of their work or their discharge, etc., is what they are on the stand to tell, and not one of them could be claimed to be unbiased. See Vol. IX, 3364, quoting from Mrs. Dorsey:

"A. I quit because I wasn't treated right.

. . . . . .

Q. You weren't treated right, you thought. A. I don't think, I know.

Q. You quit because you were mad? (fol. 5985) A. I wasn't treated right when I quit.

Q. Well, you are mad at the Company? A. I won't say at the Company. I was mad at some of those people down there, they didn't treat me right.

Q. Who are you mad at? A. Well, that Cecile Ealy is a snake in the grass.

. . . . . .

A. Well, I will admit I got a little mad at Mrs. Reed because she wouldn't hear me, and I thought after practically 16 years of service that she should have seen me and talked to me and hear my side of the story."

And at 3365:

"Q. What is Cecile Ealy's position there? A. I don't really know. She is a sort of tattle-tale down there.

Q. You were mad and venomous about this whole matter (fol. 5986), weren't you? Just boiling mad, aren't you? A. Yes, when her name comes up it makes me mad."

Lola Skeens at p. 3447:

"Q. Were you dissatisfied with your work? A. Not with my work exactly.

Q. What were you dissatisfied with? A. With Cecil.

Q. What had Cecil done? A. Well, she didn't like me very well, and I wasn't very happy working under her."

Bessie Weibert at p. 3563:

"And I said, 'Well, I'm just going to sit here, I'm not going to take any part in (fol. 6329) these meetings.' And she said, 'Well, Bessie, aren't you pleased with some of the things that are being done?'

. . . . . .

(Continuing) And I said, 'Yes, with what is being done, but there isn't nearly enough being done, Rose.' And I said, 'From now on don't expect me to do anything about it.' I said, 'I'm through.' And I did —I really sat in from then on."

And again at page 3564:

"I absolutely know that Rose Todd and Mary Copowycz framed two other operators and myself, because I caught her on it right after it was done."

May Stevens secretly joined the International the same day or the day following her joining the DGWU, and thereafter remained a member of the DGWU, but passed names of DGWU members on to Jane Palmer, an attorney for the International (see pp. 3696 and 3708):

"Q. Mrs. Stevens, you stated that when you got away from the Donnelly Garment Company on the evening of (fol. 6640) the 27th of April, 1937, after you had signed the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union card, you called the International Ladies' Garment Workers' office? A. As soon as I got home, I called.

Q. And did you get someone on the telephone then? A. Yes, I did, someone in the office.

Q. And do you know who it was? A. No, I couldn't say now who it was.

Q. Did you meet a Miss Jane Palmer? A. She is the one that came to my house that night.

Q. And did you tell her that you had just signed the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union card? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you wanted to join the ILGWU? A. Yes.

Q. You got this card the next day? A. Yes."

* * * * * * *

And at p. 3708:

"Q. To whom did you report ~~names~~ of members of the ILGWU that you got or thought you could get in the plant? A. Only the one person, Jane Palmer."

No comment is needed as to her bias.

These witnesses recall that the violence of the International at the Gordon and Gernes plants and the threat to extend it to the Donnelly plant was known to, and a frequent subject of conversation among, the employees of the Donnelly plant, and while they generally personally professed that they were never alarmed for themselves, yet they testify that the idea of organizing a union of their own would be a means of protection against a forcible attempt to organize them by the International, was a substantial cause throughout the plant generally of the organization of the DGWU. See the testimony of Geneva Copenhaver, p. 3514:

"Q. Now, is it not a fact that the violence at the Gernes, Gordon and Missouri plants caused the Donnelly employees to organize the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union? A. Well, I guess that is what brought it about."

Of Mrs. Weilert at 3581:

"Q. Now, Mrs. Weilert, you stated that when the union was formed you thought that it was an organization formed by the voluntary action of the employees? A. Yes.

Q. Did the violence at the other garment plants in 1937 cause you to feel that a plant union would protect the employees? A. Well, I didn't know if it was the union that would protect us, that was a mystery to me; I didn't know any (fol. 6361) thing about unions, but I did feel like we needed protection if they came down there."

And the testimony of Mrs. Skeens at 3455:

"Q. Were the employees generally frightened about what was going on at these other strikes? A. Why, I think some of them were, most of them were.

Q. Were you? A. Yes."

The bulk of the testimony of these witnesses is a recital of their own individual quarrels with the management or with the DGWU. and a testimony as to details of the hours of holding some out of many meetings about five years previously, and as to why they did or did not at the noon recess or other times remain overtime at a meeting of the executive committee without being docked on their pay sheet by the Company. Although these events were years ago, the witnesses had not considered them for years and their memories colored by bias and partisanship had only been refreshed within the past few days before testifying. See 3369 (Mrs. Dorsey):

"Q. Now, when were you first asked by anyone connected with either the Labor Board or Mr. Langsdale's client about the incidents you have testified to in this hearing? A. When I was first asked about—will you please ask me again?

Q. Yes, I will. A. Thank you.

Q. When were you first asked by anyone connected with the Labor Board or anyone connected with Mr. Langsdale or his client about the incidents you have testified to here in this hearing? A. Well, I can't remember the date.

Q. Well, roughly; I don't care to bind you to the exact date. Was it within the last week, or was it within the last 10 days, or the last month? Fix it as near as you can. A. Well, I'll say within the last 10 days."

And at 3466 (Lola Skeens):

"Q. That was the first person you ever told about that? A. Yes.

Q. And that was when, that you told Miss Weyand? A. About a week ago. I don't remember what day it was."

And at 3520 (Geneva Copenhaver):

"Q. When was the first time you ever talked with anybody about this affidavit that was shown you this morning, this intervener's Exhibit No. 20? A. When? You mean, just recently?

Q. When was any time, other than the time you signed it? A. Other than when I signed it?

Q. Yes. A. I don't know when the first time was.

Q. Well, you have talked with somebody about it before you took the witness stand, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. Who was that? A. Miss Weyand.

Q. When did you talk with her about it? A. Last night.

Q. Any time prior to last night? A. I don't remember whether I did or not.

Q. When did you talk with Miss Weyand about your testimony in this case prior to last night? A. Let's see. I believe it was in July.

Q. Now, are those the only two times you have talked with Miss Weyand? A. No. I talked with her one other time, about a week ago."

* * * * * * * *

And at 3685 (May Stevens):

"Q. When did you first see those minutes? A. Possibly a couple of weeks ago.

Q. And that was the first time in your life you had ever seen those minutes? A. Yes.

Q. The minutes of the meeting described as about five years ago? A. Yes."

Note carefully that if the Board admits such a thing as primary evidence then these five witnesses are its case. Yet what they actually say is that they personally have grievances against the Company or co-employees which they would be glad to discuss, but that so far as the matter of whether the employees did voluntarily and of their own free will and on their motion organize their own labor union, the employees are telling the truth when they say they did. There is one who never reaches any clear answer to the question through many pages of testimony, and one who probably through some feeling of loyalty to some other organization and duty to carry the fight all the way professes false swearing on this point in the past. It is not necessary to quote authorities to establish that her testimony on the point is without weight. But if the Board's case is not consideration of the direct testimony of the many people who have primary knowledge, including their own witnesses, then it is a case in which all of the primary evidence of petitioners is unimpeached and the effort to ignore or destroy it by relying on inferences from subsidiary facts is unavailing.

The value of secondary facts and inference from them must vary in every case because they must be considered in the light of contrary evidence and all the material evidence. We have found no case in which the affirmative evidence of the genuine free will persistent choice of a plant union even approaches the strength of such evidence in this case. But there are many cases in which the evidence of domination through insignificant favors of an employer or unauthorized remarks by an employee, or insignificant use of employer's property, or encroachments on time, have been held insufficient to establish invalidity of a union, and in all of these cases the contrary evidence in support of the validity of the union was far weaker than it is in the case at bar.

See:

National Labor Relations Board v. Lion Shoe Co., 97 Fed. (2d) 448.

Balston-Stillwater v. National Labor Relations Board, 98 Fed. (2d) 758.

Staley v. National Labor Relations Board, 7 Labor Relations Reporter 302.

Midland Steel Products v. National Labor Relations Board, 113 Fed. (2d) 800.

National Labor Relations Board v. Ford Motor Co., 114 Fed. (2d) 905.

National Labor Relations Board v. Draper Corp., 145 Fed. (2d) 199 at 205.

National Labor Relations Board v. International Shoe Co., 116 Fed. (2d) 31.

Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 112 Fed. (2d) 549.

National Labor Relations Board v. Columbian Enameling & Stamping Co., 306 U. S. 292; 83 L. Ed. 660.

Appalachian Electric Power Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 93 Fed. (2d) 985.

National Labor Relations Board v. Sands Mfg. Co., 96 Fed. (2d) 721, 306 U. S. 332; 83 L. Ed. 682.

National Labor Relations Board v. Asheville Hosiery Co., 108 Fed. (2d) 288.

Jeffery-DeWitt Insulator Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 91 Fed. (2d) 134.

Bussman Mfg. Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 111 Fed. (2d) 783.

Martel Mills Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 114 Fed. (2d) 624.

Consolidated Aircraft Case, 46 National Labor Relations Board 1120.

Magnolia Petroleum v. NLRB, 112 Fed. (2d) 545 at 549:

"And, when it is clear as here, that the material evidence is entirely without dispute; that no witness denies a fact to which another testifies; that in short, the findings are based, not upon conflicting but upon nonconflicting evidence, our determination as to whether the Board's findings must stand or fall must not rest upon whether the Board deems that the inferences it drew are supported by substantial evidence. It must rest upon whether measured by the settled rules governing the review of jury verdicts, it is the opinion of this court that the undisputed facts are in law capable of fairly giving rise to the fact inference the Board has drawn.

"It nowhere provides, and there is no warrant in it for the view, that preference by employees for an unaffiliated, as against a nationally affiliated organization, raises a presumption that this preference was coerced or bought by the employer. Indeed, the statute goes on exactly the contrary presumption that employees have the intelligence and chara ter requisite for self-organization, either by joining an existing labor organization or forming one of their own."

NLRB v. Thompson Products, 97 Fed. (2d) 13 at page 15 (italics ours):

"'Substantial evidence' means more than a mere scintilla. It is of substantial and relevant consequence and excludes vague, uncertain, or irrelevant matter. It implies a quality of proof which induces conviction and makes an impression on reason. It means that the one weighing the evidence takes into consideration all the facts presented to him and all reasonable inferences, deductions and conclusions to be drawn therefrom and, considering them in their entirety and relation to each other, arrives at a fixed conviction.

The rule of substantial evidence is one of fundamental importance and is the dividing line between law and arbitrary power. Testimony is the raw material out of which we construct truth and, unless all of it is weighed in its totality, errors will result and great injustices be wrought."

Treating evidence in the case as a whole, each item in the light of other established facts, as it must be treated, the most that the Board's evidence can hope to do is to establish that certain secondary disputed facts may be true and that, if true, certain inferences as to the primary facts to be determined may be drawn from them. But reaching the conclusions from such inferences is allowable only when positive, substantial, unimpeached, established evidence to the contrary does not appear or at least does not appear in substantial quantities. See Pennsylvania Railroad v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 341, 77 L. E. 823.

"And the desired inference is precluded for the further reason that respondent's right of recovery depends upon the existence of a particular fact which must be inferred from proven facts, and this is not permissible in the face of the positive and otherwise uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached witnesses consistent with the facts actually proved, from which testimony it affirmatively appears that the fact sought to be inferred did not exist. This conclusion results from a consideration of many decisions, of which the following are examples: (Citing cases.) A rebuttable inference of fact, as said by the court in Wabash R. Co. case 'must necessarily yield to credible evidence of the actual occurrence.' And as stated by the court in George v. Mississippi P. R. Co., 213 Mo. App. 668, 251 S. W. 729, supra, 'It is well settled that where plaintiff's case is based upon an inference or inferences, that the case must fail upon proof of undisputed facts inconsistent with such inferences'."

We earnestly and sincerely believe and submit that in the case at bar the secondary and generally disputed incidents and the possible inferences therefrom, cannot be considered substantial evidence on the primary fact to be determined (i. e., the choice of the employees as to labor representation and whether it was free or dominated), in the light of the universal sworn testimony of all the employees who, as witnesses, were unimpeached and who have consistently and repeatedly so testified or offered to testify to the same effect over a period of several years.

Whenever hundreds of people are thrown together during the working day for months and years and in many evening meetings, with a common and vital interest in a subject agitated among them personally and by the press, it is inevitable that there would be hundreds of statements, situations and actions, and that from such limitless number there could always be selected scores of them from which any desired inference about that subject could be drawn. This would be true of anything, from a Sunday school picnic to a meeting of the United States Congress, if the subject of discussion persisted for a comparative length of time. And this is all that the Board's evidence boils down to. We wind up the evidence where it started with the positive testimony of 1,200 unimpeached witnesses who know the fact, opposed by 5 discredited ex-employees, developed some years after the event. We doubt if we should say "opposed," for although these witnesses complain that they were not properly treated when they worked at the Donnelly plant and express varying degrees of dislike or hatred for the Company or the plant union and testify to being ordered to attend meetings or other incidents shown not to be typical, even if true, yet, if we can understand their evidence, they tacitly admit that the great majority of the employees formed their own union, largely as a means of protection against the threatened violence of International.

IV.

Intervener was denied due process of law and a fair trial and the Board's finding and order under such circumstances cannot stand.

(a) The bias and prejudice of the examiner.

(b) The refusal of the examiner and the Board to either receive or consider as material the important and specific evidence for the taking and consideration of which the case was specifically remanded by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

(a) The bias and prejudice of the examiner.

One of the vital elements of a fair trial is a judge or board or examiner who is unprejudiced as to the particular issue he or it is to try. This is, of course, a different thing than his general philosophy of justice, or his knowledge of the law, or his mistakes as to the law, or even his desire to reach a result which he may believe is right. If his belief as to what the facts are, or what are the correct inferences from them in the case to be tried, has already been reached, or definitely inclined toward a certain conclusion, or his moral support engaged in a general way on one side or the other, then neither litigant is required to rely on a speculative possibility that the judge may make the correct allowance for his own prejudice and by this uncertain further difficult, if not impossible, process, nevertheless give a fair trial. If prejudice exists no judge, board or examiner can tell how much to allow for it or how to correctly discount it even though he might earnestly desire to do so. The litigant is entitled to a different judge. He is entitled to an open and receptive mind in which a decision is to be reached on the evidence presented, unaffected by preconceived or prejudiced ideas. This is just as true of an administrative body, with power to pass on the facts, as it is of a court.

Moreover, it applies when the surrounding circumstances, actions and remarks of the judge or board indicate prejudice without resorting to the impossible attempt to see into the mind of the court itself.

See Morgan Sheep Com. Co. v. U. S., 82 L. Ed. 1129, l. c. 1134, 304 U. S. 1; 58 S. Ct. l. c. 999:

"The maintenance of proper standards on the part of administrative agencies in the performance of their quasi-judicial functions is of the highest importance and in no way cripples or embarrasses the exercise of their appropriate authority. On the contrary, it is in their manifest interest. For, as we said at the outset, if these multiplying agencies deemed to be necessary in our complex society are to serve the purposes for which they are created and endowed with vast powers, they must accredit themselves by acting in accordance with the cherished judicial tradition embodying the basic concepts of fair play."

Inland Steel v. NLRB, 109 Fed. (2d) 9, l. c.

"That a trial by a biased judge is not in conformity with due process is sustained by the authorities.

"The recognition of the principle is as essential in proceedings before administrative agencies as it is before courts. As was said in Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U. S. 292, at page 304, 35 S. Ct. 724, at page 730, 81 L. Ed. 1093:

"* * * Indeed, much that they do within the realm of administrative discretion is exempt from supervision if those restraints have been obeyed. All the more insistent is the need, when power has been bestowed so freely, that the "inexorable safeguard" (citing case) of a fair and open hearing be maintained in its integrity (citing case). The right to such a hearing is one of "the rudiments of fair play" (citing case) assured to every litigant by the Fourteenth Amendment as a minimal requirement (citing cases). There can be no compromise on the footing > of convenience or expediency, or because of a natural desire to be rid of harassing delay, when that minimal requirement has been neglected or ignored.'"

In Berger v. United States, 255 U. S. 22, 65 L. Ed. 481 (l. c. 486), the Supreme Court of the United States said with reference to the section of the Judicial Code disqualifying a judge for bias or prejudice:

> "* * * but we may say that its solicitude is that the tribunals of the country shall not only be impartial in the controversies submitted to them, but shall give assurance that they are impartial—free, to use the words of the section, from any 'bias or prejudice' that might disturb the normal course of impartial judgment."

Montgomery Ward v. NLRB, 103 Fed. (2d) 147, at 156:

> "Obvious bias of examiner. Naturally, it requires reading of this entire evidence to get the full perception of the clearly biased attitude of the examiner. Instead of maintaining the impartial position of one who is to determine—in a preliminary stage—the ultimate facts and action thereon, he assumed the place of attorney supporting the complaint."

That the intervener did not receive such a fair or impartial trial is evident from the facts.

Before the taking of any testimony in the rehearing the company filed an application for the appointment of a different trial examiner. The intervener joined in this application (Vol. A, p. 499). The grounds were set forth in the affidavit supporting the application (Vol. A, p. 475-493). The Board denied the application (Vol. A, p. 498), and the company and the intervener filed objections (Vol. A, 502, A, 504).

It may be urged that the examiner repeated statements in the first hearing that the sworn testimony of any number of employees, though unimpeached and in no way discredited, was worthless (Vol. A, pp. 483, 484, 485, 492), was a mere mistake of law. But when after the Appellate Court's ruling that such testimony was material and must be admitted, weighed and considered, he again ignored it in his second (Vol. X, p. 3837), it can hardly be denied that prejudice existed.

(b) The refusal of the examiner and the Board to either receive or consider as material the important and specific evidence for the taking and consideration of which the case was specifically remanded by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The International urges in its brief that rejection of evidence is only judicial error and not denial of due process. Probably the degree of importance of the material evidence wrongfully rejected has some bearing on the question of whether such action amounts to denial of due process. Even the International impliedly recognizes that the wrongful exclusion of evidence "essential to a party's case" would amount to denial of due process. Clearly, the rejection of all of the testimony of witnesses who must know the fact concerning which they propose to testify, as the Court of Appeals has pointed out, and where the trier of the fact accepts isolated bits of their testimony about details as to whether meetings were held on certain dates and times with the universal result of treating them as establishing the contrary of what they testify and where this is done in violation of the mandate of the supervisory court, it is more than a mere refusal to admit material evidence and amounts to making a mockery of the trial.

See Gung You v. Nagle, 34 Fed. (2d) 848 at 851:

"The refusal to hear competent witnesses or competent testimony available is a denial of due process of law, as we held in a recent case refusing to permit the taking of a deposition in such cases. Young Bark Yau v. U. S., (CCA No. 5777, filed June 17, 1929) 33 Fed. (2d) 236. The mere hearing of witnesses by an officer is of no avail to a party if the evidence of competent witnesses is to be entirely disregarded and findings made in the teeth of the testimony of one or a dozen such witnesses * * *"

See, also:

Stone v. Stone, 136 Fed. (2d) 761, 764.
George v. Capital Traction Co., 295 Fed. 965, 968.
Deposit Guaranty Bank and Trust Co. v. U. S., 48 Fed. Sup. 369, 371.
New York & Cuba Mail SS Co. v. Continental Ins. Co., 32 F. Sup. 251, 265.
American Alliance Ins. Co. v. Brady Transfer & S. Co., 101 Fed. (2d) 144, 149.
Alabama Title and Trust Co. v. Millsap, 71 Fed. (2d) 518, 520.
Becher v. Miller, 7 Fed. (2d) 293, 295.
Winn v. Consolidated Coach Corp., 65 Fed. (2d) 256, 257.
NLRB v. Columbian Enameling and Stamping Co., 306 U. S. 292, 299, 83 L. Ed. 660, 665, 59 S. Ct. 501.
NLRB v. Sands Mfg. Co., 306 U. S. 332, 339, 83 L. Ed. 682, 687.
Appalachian Electric Power Co. v. NLRB, 93 F. (2d) 985, 989.
Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. NLRB, 112 F. (2d) 545, 548.
NLRB v. Bell Oil and Gas Co., 98 (F. (2d) 406, 410.
NLRB v. A. S. Abell Co., 97 F. (2d) 951, 958.
Gunning v. Cooley, 281 U. S. 90, 94, 74 L. Ed. 720, 724.

The refusal to allow any witnesses for intervener to testify in its case in chief, and receive any substantial number of employees in the company's case, is discussed as affecting the question of whether there was substantial evidence elsewhere. It is also important on the point of whether there was due process. Of course, a case is not really tried at all if a certain amount of material, relevant and important evidence is excluded from admission and from the consideration of the facts from which the verdict springs.

When it comes to the specific evidence involved the question of the absolute necessity of its due consideration answers itself. The primary question before the Board was one of mental fact—of motive—of the state of mind of a certain group of people. The law does not say that because we cannot see into people's minds therefore there is no primary evidence and we will determine it exclusively by inference. The motive and intent of people is determined every day by the courts and their testimony as to such mental fact and their explanations of how they reached it is received as important evidence. The sworn testimony of the large group of people involved who know what the fact is and the reasons and explanations they give are important evidence on the fact to be determined. The first is subject to cross-examination and all of the accepted tests of truthfulness, including impeachment, and the second is subject to the tests as to whether such reasons are probable and persuasive or unlikely and absurd. But to refuse to give them any weight at all, and rely entirely on secondary, disputed, minor facts, from which inference only may be drawn, is to simply fail and refuse to try the issue.

See Mart Mills Corporation v. NLRB, 114 Fed. (2d) 624, at 631:

> "Obviously our chief guide is the words of the witness under oath who undertook to disclose the workings of his mind. If his explanation is a reasonable one, the onus is upon the Board to establish the falsity of this explanation and the truth of its own interpretation. See National Labor Relations Board v. Remington Rand, Inc., 94 Fed. (2d) at page 862."

Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. NLRB, 112 Fed. (2d), l. c. 548:

> "In its capacity as accuser, the Board, under the genius of our institutions, is held to the same burdens and obligations of proof as any other litigant who takes the affirmative. It may not by accusing put the accused upon proof. As accuser it must prove its charge.
>
> In its capacity as a trier of facts, the Board stands on the footing of a jury. Like a jury it must be impartial. Like a jury, it may not make findings without evidence to support them and as in the case of a jury, it is for the courts to say whether there is or is not evidence in support."

And again at 549:

> "When then, as here, the Board applies to this court for enforcement of its order, and there is a substantial challenge of the findings and order as unsupported by evidence, it is the duty of this court to examine the evidence for itself, not, of course, to determine what fact inferences it, acting as a trier, would have drawn, what fact findings it would have made, but to determine whether reasonable minds having no interest as accuser or otherwise in the result, but wholly impartial, could upon the evidence have legally and fairly drawn the fact inferences, made the fact findings. And, when, it is clear as here, that the material evidence is entirely without dispute; that no witness denies a fact to which another testifies; that in short, the findings are based, not upon conflicting but upon nonconflicting evidence, our determination as to whether the Board's findings must stand or fall must not rest upon whether the Board deems that the inferences it drew are supported by substantial evidence. It must rest upon whether measured by the settled rules governing the review of jury verdicts, it is the opinion of this court that the undisputed facts are in law capable of fairly giving rise to the fact inferences the Board has drawn.

This must be so for if it were not, if the Board in the determination of these sometimes bitter and always partisan contests between nationally affiliated locals and those unaffiliated; were given the right at once, to sponsor as accuser the side of the national organization, and to determine conclusively, for itself, unchecked by judicial review not only the effect of conflicting evidence, but whether in law there is any substantial evidence to sustain its accusation it would be nothing short of a miracle if these proceedings either in their course or in their results should be found to afford due process. The American people from their beginnings have been skeptical of the occurrence of such miracles, and they have not been willing to leave the vital matter of a fair and just trial to the hazard of miraculous intervention. It is plain from the careful provisions the Congress has made in the act against the exercise of this unbridled power that it is equally skeptical of such miracles, and that it is equally unwilling to leave to such hazards the rights of self-organization which the statute guarantees to workers, free from compulsion from any source. For, while a proceeding of this kind takes the form of a charge against the employer, the real substance and design of it is to seat one labor organization over another.

with the greatly unjust result, if the decision of the labor board is wrong, of depriving employees of the very rights the act guarantees them." (Italics ours.)

See also NLRB v. Bell Oil & Gas Co., 98 Fed. (2d) 406, at 410.

That not only a necessary but the controlling issue in the case is whether the employees have been acting in accordance with their own choice or have been dominated or interfered with by the employer, is clearly stated by the Circuit Court of Appeals in previous appeal of this case. This does not mean that the latter class of facts are without value, since there are many situations in various labor cases in which they may, if existent, prove and meet the burden of proof on the Board of establishing the domination of a labor union. But they must do so not in a vacuum and with consideration limited solely to them, but within the framework of all the evidence which is material and competent, and if, in the face of the affirmative evidence of the free choice of the employees, such inferences from secondary facts lose all persuasive value, then it cannot be said that there is substantial evidence upon which a judgment in favor of the Board can be based. See Donnelly Garment Company v. NLRB, 123 Fed. (2d) 215, at 221:

> "The main and controlling issue in the case was whether the formation or administration of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union had been supported, dominated or interfered with by the company, or whether that union was a bona fide independent labor organization formed and administered exclusively by the employees of the company and completely free from employer influence, domination and support." (Italics ours.)

The court on the first appeal would not have sent this case back for rehearing if it were not true that the testimony of the employees and the proper consideration of that testimony was necessary in order to reach a decision. If such testimony had been merely an unnecessary but interesting sidelight on the evidence or the attitude of the Board, the court might have commented upon that fact, but would have allowed the decision to stand. See page 224:

> "The truth is that a controversy tried before a court or before an administrative agency is not ripe for decision until all competent and material evidence proffered by the parties has been received and considered."

And by the "testimony of the employees" the court meant their testimony as to their own state of mind, as to whether they acted from their own choice or were dominated. See page 222:

> "The individuals who form an unincorporated association certainly should know what sort of an organization it is, how it happened to be formed, who influenced its formation, and who controls it. We think there can be no doubt of the right of the members of such an organization to testify to such matters, and that their evidence is admissible regardless of its weight."

It must follow that since on the retrial the Board could not secure any favorable evidence on this vital point upon which a reasonable mind could base a finding of domination, then it has failed to carry the burden of proof. If inferences claimed by the Board were enough to establish domination regardless of the testimony of the employees as to mental facts, no matter what it might have been, then the finding of the Board would simply have been affirmed.

Incidentally, to hold that several hundred employees are either perjurers or so stupid that they do not know whether they did a thing because they desired to or because they are intimidated into doing it, is to unjustifiably attack their integrity or their intelligence or both.

The refusal of the examiner to admit evidence of any facts whatever occurring since the first hearing is a further denial of due process (Vol. VIII, p. 2597; Vol. XI, p. 4000). It is not maintained that it would be proper to try charges on matters not alleged in the complaint and occurring since it was filed, but a flat ruling that nothing occurring since the first hearing in 1939 is admissible is simply a violation of law and logic. A medical examination even during the trial throws light on whether a man was injured in the past. A photograph of streets taken recently, an examination of the books and many other facts after a first trial have evidentiary value. See 32 C. J. S., Sec. 581, p. 437, and Sec. 585, p. 439. As stated by opponent's counsel: "Because it has always been my theory that it has always been proper to prove something before by something which happened after" (Vol. X, p. 3577). The continuous and successful operation of the union down to the present time and for some seven years continuously is such a fact. A recent ruling of the Treasury Department which forbids the expenditure of funds on prosecution of a union which has operated successfully and without complaint for three months is recognition of the fact and policy that the continuous, peaceful operation of a union is persuasive evidence of its acceptability to employees.

In the case at bar the DGWU was formed April 27, 1937. An agreement in which terms were reached with the company on May 27, 1937, and a supplemental agreement, including wage scales, was signed on June 22, 1937. The first charges by the International were not filed before August, 1938, and the NLRB filed a complaint on April 6, 1939, which was withdrawn and another filed on April 27, 1939. Thus two years elapsed before complaint was filed. This situation was entitled to consideration by the Board in reaching its conclusions, but the evidence was not considered.

The unvarying acceptance of any evidence no matter how inferential and how much discredited when offered by the International or the Board, and the unvarying discrediting of any evidence no matter how primary and free from impeachment which was offered by the company or the intervenor (see NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, 99 Fed. (2d) 153, at 177, cited supra, and cases cited therein. Also NLRB v. Thompson Products, 97 Fed. (2d) 13) establishes bias, which makes due process impossible.

Conclusion.

The Board has twice failed to make a case. It has done so the second time after express detailed and authoritative directions as to what is required in order to make a case in this situation. It has admitted in effect that it cannot make a case for if it could have done anything whatever with the testimony of any of the employees it would certainly have done so. It again admits that it cannot make a case when it flatly denies the statement of the Court of Appeals that the evidence of the employees as to their choice and how and why they were influenced is material and relevant, and reasserts that it is immaterial and irrelevant. Yet again it admits that it cannot make a case when it asks this Court to ignore the gaps in the evidence which should have been placed on the scales as pointed out by the Court of Appeals. In such a situation the company and the intervener should not be put to the heavy expense of time and money for a third hearing. The Board's order should be vacated, its complaint ordered dismissed and decision rendered in favor of the intervener.

Respectfully submitted,

FRANK E. TYLER,
GOSSETT, ELLIS, DIETRICH & TYLER,
Attorneys for Intervener-Petitioner
Donnelly Garment Workers' Union.

APPENDIX.

Excerpts from the explanation of the purposes and intents of the Federal Administrative Procedure Act in the Senate.

The Congressional Record, 79th Congress, 2nd Session, Vol. 92, p. 2199, Discussion of Administrative Procedure Act, Senate, March 12, 1946, reports the following discussion on the floor of the Senate relating to the provisions of Section 10 (e):

Mr. Ferguson: "Would the Senator, then, say that the judgment or decision of the agency must be based upon stronger proof than a scintilla of evidence?"

Mr. McCarran: "Very much stronger."

Mr. Ferguson: "The old rule which applied in the courts, particularly on certiorari, was that if there was any evidence to sustain the verdict or judgment, it should be sustained. The courts have many times so held. The Senator would say, would he not, that something more than 'any evidence' is required to sustain a decision?"

Mr. McCarran: "The answer is in the affirmative. We say that the evidence must be substantial probative evidence."

Mr. Ferguson: "So we are changing the rule which has been applied in the past that any evidence, or a scintilla of evidence, as it is sometimes defined, is sufficient to sustain a verdict or judgment?"

Mr. McCarran: "We tried as best we could to establish a guide for administrative groups so that they would apply the rule in such a way that there would be substantial probative evidence behind their findings, and so that they could say, 'We are not afraid to have our findings reviewed by a court.' • • •"

• • • • • • •

Mr. George: "The courts have many times held that if there is any evidence to sustain the findings of an administrative board under the statute, the courts have no power to intervene. If this bill should become a law would that rule, as heretofore construed by the courts, remain in effect?"

Mr. McCarran: "The courts have given various constructions. The courts, in reviewing an order, are governed by the provisions of Section 10 (e), which states the substantial-evidence rule. In other words, in some instances the courts have held that there must be substantial evidence. We are saying that there must be probative evidence of a substantial nature, and that even though the commission or bureau may take hearsay evidence in its hearings, it must have some probative evidence to sustain its finding."

Mr. George: "The point I wish to raise is that some of the Acts of Congress, particularly those enacted in recent years, have led the courts to hold—and they so hold—that if there be any evidence to sustain the finding of a board or agency, the court has no power to interfere with it."

Mr. McCarran: "I would put it in this way—"

Mr. George: "Would the enactment of this bill require some substantial or probative evidence to support such a finding?"

Mr. McCarran: "Yes."

Mr. George: "Take the labor relations cases. Senators are familiar with them. The circuit courts have frequently complained against what the Labor Relations Board did, but have said, 'We are powerless to interfere with it.' Would this bill change that rule, if the court were of the opinion that there was no probative evidence?"

Mr. McCarran: "Yes; it would change that rule."

Mr. George: "I am pleased to hear it."

Congressional Record, 79th Congress, 2nd Session, March 12, 1946, p. 2198:

Mr. Austin: "Did the committee intentionally choose the language 'except as supported by relevant, reliable, and probative evidence' in order to avoid the rule of scintilla of proof? This phrase is very significant, as I see it. On review, for example, the case, in order to carry through as decided by the agency, would have to be supported by relevant, reliable, and probative evidence. That is, in my opinion, a very important forward step in judicial procedure, to say nothing about administrative procedure. For my part I am glad to see it in the bill."

Mr. McCarran: "Let me say to the Senator from Vermont that in the preparation of this bill many obstacles were encountered. Some of us insisted that the testimony must be relevant, material, and competent, and that nothing else should be taken. However, representatives of agencies came before us and presented their views, saying that such a rule would curtail their operations, and that they ought to be given greater latitude. They said to us, 'We are not lawyers. We are acting in a quasi-judicial capacity. We ought to be able to go outside and get hearsay testimony, if you please, we might be able to indulge in theory.' So rather than curtail the agencies, we sought an intermediate ground which we thought would be protective of the rights of individuals, and at the same time would not handicap the agencies. So we said to them, 'You may go outside and get what would be secondary evidence, or hearsay; you may perhaps even go into the realm of conjecture; but when you write your decision it must be based upon probative evidence and nothing else. If in the formation of your decision you consider other than probative evidence, your decision will be subject to being set aside by a court of review.'

"In other words, we did not wish to destroy the administrative agencies or proscribe the methods under which they have been operating. Some of us know that in committees of the Senate we very frequently hear evidence which we know is hearsay. I doubt very much if any hearing is ever conducted in which, to some extent, hearsay is not admitted. But we believe, and we now believe, that reasonable men can sift the grain from the chaff. Then we laid down the rule that the administrative agencies must not make a finding which impinges upon an individual unless there is behind such finding probative evidence to sustain it. That is what we have worked out in this bill."

Congressional Record, Senate, p. 2200:

"As a matter of language, 'substantial evidence' would seem to be an adequate expression of law. The difficulty, if any, arises from the practice of agencies to rely upon—and, in some cases, the tendency of courts to tacitly approve—something less than adequate evidence; to rely upon suspicion, surmise, implications, or plainly incredible evidence. It will be the duty of the courts to determine, in the final analysis, and in the exercise of their independent judgment, whether on the whole the evidence in a given instance is sufficiently substantial to support a finding, conclusion, or other agency action as a matter of law. In the first instance, however, it will be the function of the agency to determine the sufficiency of the evidence upon which it acts; and the proper performance of its public duties will require the agency to undertake this inquiry in a careful and dispassionate manner. Should these objectives of the bill, as worded, fail to produce the desired result, supplemental legislation will be required."

Congressional Record, Senate, p. 2201:

Mr. McCarran: "Therefore, it will be the duty of reviewing courts to prevent avoidance of the requirements of the bill by any manner or form of indirection * * *"

Additional Applicable Part of National Labor Relations Act (Act of July 5, 1935; c. 372; 49 Stat. 449, 29 USCA, page 240).

Part of Subsection (f): "Upon such filing, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Board under Subsection (e), and shall have the same exclusive jurisdiction to grant to the Board such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board."

Subsection (h): "When granting appropriate temporary relief or a restraining order, or making and entering a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part an order of the Board, as provided in this section, the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity shall not be limited by Sections 101-115 of this title."

FILE COPY

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1946.

Nos. 38 and 39.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, PETITIONER,

VS.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, A CORPORATION; DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION; AND INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, RESPONDENTS.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER,

VS.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, RESPONDENTS.

ON WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT, DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY.

ROBERT J. INGRAHAM,
BURR S. STOTTLE,
Attorneys for Respondent, Donnelly Garment Company.

REED, INGRAHAM & MILLIGAN,
Of Counsel.

INDEX

Opinions Below 1
Jurisdiction 2
Statement 2
History of Proceedings 3
The Facts 12
Summary of Argument 36

Argument—

PART ONE

I. The Court below did not abuse its power and discretion in refusing enforcement of the Board's order 41

(a) The Court below was "not in error" in ruling that the Board should have received and considered the proffered evidence 42

(1) Refusal of Board to consider as material the employees' testimony, as directed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in its former decision 43

Testimony not considered "in good faith" 45

(2) Evidence of conspiracy and violence by ILGWU 61

(3) Failure to receive evidence as to events in 1934-1935 68

Board's misuse of 1934-1935 evidence 74

(4) Failure to receive evidence of provisions of ILGWU contracts 77

(5) Refusal to receive evidence that Instructors, Thread Girls and other employees of respondent, held by the Board to be supervisory employees, were not so considered in trade unions generally, including the ILGWU itself, but were eligible to union membership 80

(6) Refusal to permit respondent to examine Wave Tobin as to threats and violence of ILGWU, and concerning eligibility of "Instructors," etc., to participate in unions, and generally 87

Rulings on Rebuttal evidence, etc. 87

(b) The Court was not in error in ruling that the Board should have designated a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing 90

(c) In any event, the Court's rulings were not so completely wrong as to constitute an abuse of its judicial power and discretion 95

PART TWO

I. The Board's Findings, Conclusions and Order Are not supported by the evidence 99

A. The direct evidence is overwhelming that Respondent's employees formed and operated the DGWU of their own free will and accord, without coercion or interference by Respondent 99

B. The "circumstantial" evidence of the Board is contrary to the overwhelming direct testimony and does not support the Board's findings and conclusions 112

B-1. The Board's findings and conclusions as to the March 18th meeting and as to Mrs. Reed's Remarks at said meeting, are not supported by the evidence 113

B-2. The Board's findings and conclusions as to "supervisory employes" are not supported by the evidence 132

(1) Re supervisory employees generally 133

(2) The Instructors and Thread Girls were not "supervisory" employees 143

Instructors and Thread Girls not regarded by employees as Supervisors 157

(3) Rose Todd was not a supervisory employee 159

(a) Rose Todd's duties were not supervisory 159

(b) Rose Todd as an "all-around man" 163

(c) Rose Todd and the Fern Sigler incident 163

(d) Re Rose Todd having a desk 168

(e) The employees did not regard Rose Todd as a supervisory employee 168

Re: Other alleged supervisory employees 169

B-3. The Board findings and conclusions with reference to the Loyalty League are not supported by the evidence 173

(1) The Loyalty League was not a "Prior Labor Union" and the holding of the Newport News Shipbuilding Case is not applicable 173

(2) The Loyalty League was not formed, dominated or used by Respondent, and its alleged activities are not attributable to Respondent 176

(a) The Loyalty League was not formed by Respondent 176

(b) The Loyalty League after its formation was not dominated or used by Respondent to coerce its employes in union matters 177

B-4. The Board's findings and conclusions as to the "March 2nd statement" are not supported by the evidence 178

B-5. Respondent did not dominate the organization meeting of the DGWU on April 27th 180

B-6. The Board's findings and conclusions as to use by the DGWU of company property and facilities are not supported by the evidence 181

B-7. The Board's findings and conclusions as to prompt recognition of, and bargaining with, the DGWU are not supported by the evidence 184

B-8. The Board's findings and conclusions as to the terms of working agreements between Respondent and the DGWU, including the "closed shop" provision, are not supported by the evidence 185

B-9. The Board's findings and conclusions as to the appointment of Rose Todd, Mrs. Nichols and Miss Spalito on DGWU's committee for adjustment of piece work prices are not supported by the evidence 187

B-10. The Board's findings and conclusions as to encouragement and approval by Respondent of the April 23rd "Demonstrations," are not supported by the evidence 189

B-11. The Board's findings and conclusions that Sylvia Hull was laid off by Respondent because of her union activities and that the Respondent thereby interfered with the rights of its employees are not supported by the evidence 191

B-12. The Board's findings and conclusions as to coercion and interference, based on Respondent's alleged hostility toward unions, are not supported by the evidence 192

B-13. The Board's findings and order as to refund of checked-off dues are contrary to the evidence and the law 193

B-14. The Board's findings, conclusions and order are contrary to the authorities 195

Conclusion 196

TABLE OF CASES

American Smelting & Refining Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 126 F. 2d 680 ..... 51, 119
American Steel Barrel Co., Ex Parte, 230 U. S. 35 94
Apex Hosiery Co. vs. Leader, 301 U. S. 501 34
Ballston-Stillwater Knitting Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 98 F. 2d 758 ..... 171, 176, 183
Berkowitz Envelope Co., 38 NLRB No. 914 83
Boeing Airplane Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 140 F. 2d 423 196
Borchard vs. California Bank, 310 U. S. 311 92
Budd Mfg. Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 142 F. 2d 922 127
Castle & Cooke Terminals, Ltd., 17 L. R. R. 859, 65 NLRB No. 175 83
Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co. vs. Martin, 283 U. S. 209 53
Commonwealth Edison Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 135 F. 2d 891 195
Consolidated Edison Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 197 ..... 53, 132
Cupples Co. Manufacturers vs. National Labor Relations Board, 106 F. 2d 100 ..... 53, 171, 176, 183, 184
De Bardeleben vs. National Labor Relations Board, 135 F. 2d 213 47
Diamond-T Motor Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 119 F. 2d 978 195
Donnelly Garment Co. vs. David Dubinsky et al., 55 F. Supp. 572 ..... 28, 35
Donnelly Garment Co. vs. International Ladies Garment Workers Union, 21 F. Supp. 807 ..... 28, 33
Donnelly Garment Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 123 F. 2d 215 ..... 2, 5, 43, 51, 85
Donnelly Garment Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 151 F. 2d 854 1
Dortch Stove Works, Inc., 58 NLRB No. 82 83
E. I. Dupont de Nemours Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 116 F. 2d 388 171

Ecker vs. Western Pacific Ry. Co., 318 U. S. 448 99
Foote Bros. Gear & Mch. Corp. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 114 F. 2d 611 ..... 172, 185
Ford Motor Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 364 ..... 54, 96
Godchaux Sugars, Inc., 44 NLRB No. 981 83
L. Greif & Bro. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 108 F. 2d 551 ..... 126, 185
Hecht & Co. vs. Bowles, 321 U. S. 321 99
H. J. Heinz Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 311 U. S. 514 ..... 50, 133, 138
Humble Oil & Refining Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 113 F. 2d 85 ..... 47, 105, 127, 171, 172
Industrial Rayon Corporation, 56 NLRB No. 104 82
Inland Steel Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 109 F. 2d 9 98
Interlake Iron Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 131 F. 2d 129 119
International Association of Machinists vs. National Labor Relations Board, 311 U. S. 72 ..... 50, 80, 133, 134, 136, 169, 173
International Ladies Garment Workers Union vs. Donnelly Garment Co., 119 F. 2d 892 35
International Ladies Garment Workers Union vs. Donnelly Garment Co., 304 U. S. 243 33
Jacksonville Paper Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 137 F. 2d 148 127
Jefferson Electric Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 102 F. 2d 949 183
Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 17 L. R. R. 971 83
Keystone Steel & Wire Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 155 F. 2d 553 53
Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., 53 NLRB No. 170 83
Magnolia Petroleum Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 112 F. 2d 545 ..... 171, 176
Manufacturers' Finance Co. vs. McKey, 294 U. S. 442 99

Martel Mills Corp. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 114 F. 2d 624 171
McQuay-Norris Mfg. Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 116 F. 2d 748 184
Midland Steel Products Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 113 F. 2d 800 126
Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co. vs. Walters, 294 U. S. 405 99
National Labor Relations Board vs. American Pearl Button Co., 149 F. 2d 258 183
National Labor Relations Board vs. American Tube Bending Co., 134 F. 2d 993 127
National Labor Relations Board vs. Appalachian Elec. Power Co., 140 F. 2d 217 195-196
National Labor Relations Board vs. Arma Corporation, 122 F. 2d 153 185
National Labor Relations Board vs. Asheville Hosiery Co., 108 F. 2d 288 ..... 64, 167, 190, 192
National Labor Relations Board vs. Bradford Machine Tool Co., 138 F. 2d 246 ..... 180, 185
National Labor Relations Board vs. J. L. Brandeis & Sons, 145 F. 2d 556 ..... 127, 179, 195
National Labor Relations Board vs. Brown-Brockmeyer Co., 143 F. 2d 537 196
National Labor Relations Board vs. Clinton Woolen Mfg. Co., 141 F. 2d 753 ..... 131, 171, 183, 185, 190, 195
National Labor Relations Board vs. Columbian Enameling & Stamping Co., 306 U. S. 292 115
National Labor Relations Board vs. Dahlstrom M. Door Co., 112 F. 2d 756 184
National Labor Relations Board vs. Draper Corp., 145 F. 2d 199 180
National Labor Relations Board vs. Express Publishing Co., 312 U. S. 426 195
National Labor Relations Board vs. Greider Machine Tool & Die Co., 142 F. 2d 163 53
National Labor Relations Board vs. Indiana and Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9 ..... 41, 42, 43, 55, 61, 62, 68, 81, 92, 94, 95, 96

National Labor Relations Board vs. International Shoe Co., 116 F. 2d 31 ..... 113, 151, 163, 164, 165, 168
National Labor Relations Board vs. Laister-Kauffmann Aircraft Corp., 144 F. 2d 9 ..... 116, 119, 121
National Labor Relations Board vs. Link-Belt Co., 311 U. S. 584 ..... 50, 57, 133, 139, 141
National Labor Relations Board vs. Mathiesen Alkali Works, Inc., 114 F. 2d 796 ..... 165, 171, 183
National Labor Relations Board vs. McGough Bakeries Corp., 153 F. 2d 420 ..... 52, 93, 97
National Labor Relations Board vs. Newberry Lumber & Chem. Co., 123 F. 2d 831 98
National Labor Relations Board vs. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 308 U. S. 241 ..... 55, 173
National Labor Relations Board vs. Henry K. Phelps, Jr., Trustee, 136 F. 2d 562 94
National Labor Relations Board vs. Piqua Munising W. Prod. Co., 109 F. 2d 552 184
National Labor Relations Board vs. Prettyman, 117 F. 2d 786 97
National Labor Relations Board vs. Reeves Rubber Co., 153 F. 2d 340 116
National Labor Relations Board vs. Riverside Mfg. Co., 119 F. 2d 302 195
National Labor Relations Board vs. Sands Manufacturing Co., 96 F. 2d 721 ..... 92, 152, 171
National Labor Relations Board vs. A. Sartorius & Co., 140 F. 2d 203 51
National Labor Relations Board vs. Sheboygan Chair Co., 125 F. 2d 436 52
National Labor Relations Board vs. Sparks Withington Co., 119 F. 2d 78 ..... 171, 195
National Labor Relations Board vs. Sun Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 135 F. 2d 15 ..... 171, 180, 195
National Labor Relations Board vs. Swank Products, Inc., 108 F. 2d 872 171
National Labor Relations Board vs. Tex-O-Kan Flour Mills Co., 122 F. 2d 433 51

National Labor Relations Board vs. Thompson Products, Inc., 97 F. 2d 13 53
National Labor Relations Board vs. Union Mfg. Co., 124 F. 2d 332 195
National Labor Relations Board vs. Union Pacific Stages, Inc., 99 F. 2d 153 53
National Labor Relations Board vs. Virginia Elec. & P. Co., 314 U. S. 469 127
National Labor Relations Board vs. Washington Dehydrated Food Co., 118 F. 2d 980 ..... 92, 94
National Labor Relations Board vs. West Kentucky Coal Co., 152 F. 2d 198, 202 119
National Labor Relations Board vs. Western Cartridge Co., 138 F. 2d 551 92
Quaker State Oil Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 119 F. 2d 631 195
Rait vs. Federal Land Bank, 135 F. 2d 447 43
Ranco, Inc., 57 NLRB No. 82 81
Reid, Murdock & Company, 56 NLRB No. 57 ..... 81, 83
Republic Aviation Corp. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 65 S. Ct. 982 183
Peter J. Schweitzer, Inc., vs. National Labor Relations Board, 144 F. 2d 520 196
A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 117 F. 2d 868 52
Texas & New Orleans R. R. Co. vs. Brotherhood of Ry. & S. S. Clerks, 281 U. S. 548 ..... 126, 172, 181
Virginia Elec. & P. Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 319 U. S. 533 ..... 127, 194, 195
Washington, Va. & Md. Coach Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 301 U. S. 142 132
Western Cartridge Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 134 F. 2d 240 59
Western Union Telegraph Co., 38 NLRB No. 1386 83
Wilson & Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 126 F. 2d 114 116
Yale & Towne Mfg. Co., 56 NLRB No. 193 83

STATUTES

Judicial Code, Sec. 240 (a), 28 U. S. C. A., Sec. 347 2
National Labor Relations Act (49 Stat. 449, 29 U. S. C. 151 et seq.) 92

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1946.

Nos. 38 and 39.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, PETITIONER,

VS.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, A CORPORATION; DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION; AND INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, RESPONDENTS.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER,

VS.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, RESPONDENTS.

ON WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT, DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY.

OPINIONS BELOW.

The opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals (XIII, 7-64) are reported in 151 F. 2d 854. Prior opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals in this case are reported in 123 F. 2d 215.

JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the act of February 13, 1925, and Section 10(e) and (f) of the National Labor Relations Act.

STATEMENT.

The Board's statement contains a myriad of misstatements and assumptions. Some are plain misstatements, others are misstatements in that they assume, as established, the findings of the Trial Examiner, which is "begging the question." To point out all these various misstatements, and the evidence in the record disproving them, would require more space and particularly more time than is available.

For example, at page 12 the Board's brief says "through two of its management representatives, Todd and Atherton, the company hired an attorney to advise its employees in opposing the ILGWU (X, 3872)." This is absolutely not supported in the slightest degree by the evidence—the Board cites no reference to the evidence but only to the Trial Examiner's finding and even that reference does not support the statement made. At X, 3872 there is no statement that the company hired an attorney nor that he was employed to advise the employees in opposition to the ILGWU. These are conclusions of counsel, and the findings at (X, 3872) are conclusions of the Trial Examiner which Respondent claims are not supported by the evidence. Todd and Atherton werre not "management representatives." Counsel's statement goes farther even than the findings of the Trial Examiner and the Board, and is wholly unwarranted by the evidence. Throughout the statement of the case and throughout the argument, the "facts" as stated in the brief are largely based on the assumption that the Board's findings are supported by the evidence. The overwhelming evidence to the contrary is ignored. Everything that is said or done by any employee is claimed to have been done "by Respondent."

We can only ask that the court, in reading the Board's statement and argument, keep in mind these "assumptions.

Also in the "Questions Presented" 1 (a), page 2, the same assumption is made—the petitioner there assumes as a fact that an employer (Respondent) "through its supervisory staff sets up and takes a leading part in the administration of a plant union for the declared purpose of preventing the nationally affiliated labor organization from organizing its employees, * * *." That is far from the true situation here. The court is not entitled to make that assumption unless it first determines the merits and finds that the evidence does support the Board's findings, Respondent's contention being that it does not.

History of Proceedings.

This case has been twice before the Labor Board and twice before the Circuit Court of Appeals. The Labor Board each time found against Respondent and the Court of Appeals each time refused to enforce the Board's Order because it had failed to accord Respondent a fair trial. The Circuit Court of Appeals did not in either instance pass upon the question as to whether the Board's Order and decision was supported by the evidence. However it was Judge Riddick's view, in his concurring opinion in the Court below, that the Court should also hold that there was no substantial evidence to support the Board's Order (XIII, 55-56).

The issue before this court is whether the court below abused its power and discretion in refusing to enforce the Board's order.

The issues made by the pleadings are summarized by the Court below as follows (XIII, 2-3):

"Briefly stated, the charges were that the Company had fostered, dominated and supported the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union an independent union of the Company's employees (which, for convenience will be called the 'plant union'), and its alleged predecessor, the 'Nelly Don Loyalty League'; that the Company had entered into a closed-shop agreement with the plant union for the purpose of assisting it; that the Company, in April, 1937, discriminatorily discharged, and had refused to reinstate, two employees, Sylvia Hull and May Fike, for joining and assisting the International.

"In its answer, the Company denied that it had engaged in any unfair labor practices, and asserted the existence, on the part of the International, of a conspiracy to force the Company, by fraud, violence and secondary boycott, to compel its employees, against their will, to join the International, and that the Board, its agents and representatives were furthering this unlawful conspiracy.

"The Donnelly Garment Workers' Union (the plant union) was permitted to intervene. It admitted in its answer that the Company and the plant union had entered into a closed-shop agreement, but denied all of the other allegations of the complaint.

"The International was also permitted to intervene, in support of the charges against the company."

The "main and controlling issue" in the hearing before the Labor Board (as stated by the Court below, 123 F. 2d, l. c. 221) was whether the Respondent, Donnelly Garment Company, coerced or interfered with its employees in the formation and administration of the DGWU or whether that organization was freely and voluntarily formed by the employees. James C. Batten, Trial Examiner, at the first hearing, refused to receive or consider the testimony of the 1,200 employees on this issue (VI, 1752). The Board affirmed the Trial Examiner's action in excluding this evidence, and in excluding evidence as to the violence, threats and other activities of the ILGWU, and other evidence offered by Respondent (A, 562) and entered its order against the Respondent (A, 620). Respondent appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals on the grounds: (1) that the Board's order was not supported by the evidence, and (2) that Respondent had been denied a fair trial because of the exclusion of the testimony of the employees, and the exclusion of other material evidence and the bias of the Trial Examiner. The Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Respondent's contention that it had been denied a fair trial because of the exclusion of material evidence and remanded the case to the Board to "receive and consider" the excluded evidence (123 F. 2d l. c. 225). The Court said (l. c. 221, 222, 225):

> "The main and controlling issue in the case was whether the formation or administration of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union had been supported, dominated or interfered with by the Company or whether that union was a bona fide independent labor organization formed and administered exclusively by the employees of the Company and completely free from employer influence, domination and support (l. c. 221). * * *
>
> "At the hearing before the Trial Examiner, the petitioners proffered the evidence of the employees of the Donnelly Company, some 1,200 in number, to show how and why they formed the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, to show that no influence was brought to bear upon them by the employer either in the formation or administration of the union, to show what the President of the Company had said to them at the mass meeting in the spring of 1937, to show that their freedom to organize and to choose their own representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining had not been interfered with by their employer, and to show that their union, both in its formation and administration was exclusively controlled and supported by them. The Trial Examiner refused to receive this evidence. He permitted the petitioners to make formal offers of proof (l. c. 222). * * *

"This was not a case where domination and support by an employer of an independent union was conceded or where the independent union was conclusively shown to be of a character which could not, in any event, act as the bargaining representative of its members. The evidence of the Board which tended to show domination and support of the independent union by the Company was circumstantial (l. c. 222). * * *

"It was not shown that any of the employees of the Donnelly Company whose testimony was offered was under any disqualifying disability. There was no presumption that these employees would commit perjury, and, even if the Trial Examiner believed that they would perjure themselves, that would not have affected the admissibility of their evidence. It is elementary that there is a distinction between the admissibility of evidence and its weight or sufficiency. National Labor Relations Board v. Bell Oil & Gas Co., 5 Cir., 98 F. 2d 870, 871. Surely if the testimony of an employee which tends to prove that an employer interfered with or supported the organization of an independent union is admissible, the testimony of an employee which tends to disprove domination and support of such a union by an employer is equally admissible. Evidence is relevant if it tends either to prove or disprove any issue in a case. We do not say that the Trial Examiner was required to take the same testimony from 1,200 witnesses. There were available to him well-known expedients for limiting the number of witnesses where their testimony was cumulative.

"We have no doubt that the testimony offered by the petitioners in their efforts to prove that the employees of the Donnelly Company formed the Donnelly Garment Workers Union of their own free will and that the formation and administration of that union was free from employer influence, domination and support, and to explain how and why they came to organize the union, was competent, relevant and material and should have been received. The individuals who form an unincorporated association certainly should know what sort of an organization it is, how it happened to be formed, who influenced its formation, and who controls it. We think there can be no doubt of the right of the members of such an organization to testify to such matters, and that their evidence is admissible regardless of its weight (1 c. 222). * * *

"Our conclusion is that the petition of the Board for enforcement of the order under review must be denied. We think that the least that the Board can do, in order to cure the defects in its procedure caused by the failure of the Trial Examiner to receive admissible evidence, is to vacate the order and the findings and conclusions upon which it is based; to accord to the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner; and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order" (1. c. 225).

Thereafter the Labor Board held a second hearing and again appointed James C. Batten as Trial Examiner (A, 473). Respondent objected to the designation of Batten on the ground that he was biased and prejudiced, had prejudged the employee testimony and that he had emphatically expressed his conviction that the excluded evidence was wholly worthless (A, 474-493), but the Board refused to appoint a new Trial Examiner (A, 498-502), to which ruling respondent noted its exceptions (X, 3786).

On the second hearing, Batten received the testimony of Mrs. Reed and eleven employees and then ruled that further such testimony was cumulative, which was the position taken by the Counsel for the Labor Board and the ILGWU, and refused to receive further employee-testimony (IX, 3253). He also rejected (X, 3783) all other evidence offered by respondent, including all offers of proof made at the former hearing (IX, 3265, 3270). The Trial Examiner again found against Respondent and recommended substantially the same order as in his first intermediate report. The Board adopted (A, 618) the Trial Examiner's report, of 61 pages (X, 3837-3898) verbatim, except for one minor correction (A, 620) and stated with regard to the issue of the materiality of the employees' testimony (A, 619):

> "* * * We are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the Act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case."

The Respondent again appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals on the grounds (1) that the Board's second order was not supported by the evidence, and (2) that the Respondent had not received a fair trial because of the Board's refusal on the second hearing (contrary to the Court's remand) to consider or accord any materiality to the employees' testimony, and because it had excluded other material evidence, and had ignored Respondent's evidence, and because of the refusal of the Board to designate a new Trial Examiner for the second hearing (A. 7-15 et seq.). The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the Board, at its second hearing, had denied Respondent a fair trial, for each of these reasons. We quote from the Court's holdings on these points, as follows:

1. Failure to consider employee testimony.

"It seems to us that the Company and the plant union are justified in contending that the evidence of the employees tending to show lack of domination and interference by the Company received no different or greater consideration upon the second hearing than it did upon the first, and that it was disregarded in both hearings" (XIII, 44).

2. Refusal of evidence of conspiracy on the part of ILGWU.

"The Company and the plant union here have at all times contended that the International, by the use of fraud and violence, was endeavoring to force the Company to herd its employees into the International, and that the charges filed by the International with the Board were not filed in good faith, but for the purpose of influencing the result of an action for an injunction brought by the Company to prevent the International from carrying out its threats. That the charges of misconduct made by the Company and the plant union against the International are not without substance is shown by the record. We think that if a further hearing were to be held, the application of the Company and the plant union to this Court for permission to adduce before the Board additional evidence of the alleged misconduct of the International should be granted" (XIII, 46).

3. Exclusion of evidence as to events in 1934 and 1935.

"The Board based its findings of hostility of the Company to outside unions upon evidence of events which preceded the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act. The Company and the Plant union regarded such evidence as incompetent and immaterial, and objected to its introduction. * * * It is argued that the Company and the plant union were not permitted to introduce evidence relative to these past events which the Board contended showed anti-union sentiment on the part of the Company. This argument appears to be based in part upon the refusal of the Trial Examiner, during both the first and the second hearing, to receive evidence relative to the methods which the International, from the beginning, was using in its efforts to organize the Company's employees, and in part upon the assertion that, during the second hearing, the Examiner, over the objection of the Company, permitted the Board to examine witnesses relative to events that occurred in 1935, but refused the same privilege to the Company. The testimony specifically referred to as having been improperly received, over objection, related to the Loyalty League, which, as already pointed out, the Board contended was an instrumentality of the Company to resist the International; and which the Company and the plant union asserted was a mere social organization. * * * We think, however, that the Trial Examiner, in view of the importance which he ascribed to events preceding the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act, should have received evidence proffered by the Company on the second hearing to show the methods employed by the International to organize the employees of the Company and that the Company was not guilty of the charges of discriminatory treatment of its employees made by the International under the National Industrial Recovery Act. We should hesitate to rule that the Trial Examiner's failure in this regard amounted, alone, to a denial of due process, but if the Company's attitude toward outside unions prior to the National Labor Relations Act was to be regarded as a matter of controlling consequence, the Company should, we think, have been afforded a full and fair opportunity to prove that its attitude was not what the International asserted it to be" (XIII, 46-48).

4. Exclusion of contracts of ILGWU.

"The Company and the plant union contend that, to refute the evidence relied upon by the Board and the International as indicating that the contracts with the plant union were a sham, evidence that contracts containing similar provisions were made by the International should not have been rejected. We know of no reason why evidence that provisions similar to those in the contracts of the International itself should not have been considered pertinent. It at least bore upon the 'imponderables' which the Board has the power to appraise" (XIII, 48-49).

5. Exclusion of evidence of Wave Tobin concerning violence used by ILGWU in Kansas City strikes and threats to employ the same methods against the Respondent and its employees.

"The Company and the plant union, in support of their claim that the employees formed their own union in order to protect themselves against violence and misrepresentation and to prevent the Company, under threat of the destruction of its business and their jobs, from herding them into the International against their will, had a right to show what methods the International was resorting to in its organizing campaign in Kansas City. Such testimony would have substantiated the evidence of the employees that that was the reason they organized the plant union. The employees were interested witnesses whose testimony might be discounted. The testimony of those who conducted the strikes for the International could not well be disregarded" (XIII, 50).

6. Exclusion of evidence that employees such as instructors, head cutters, head pattern makers (found by the Board to be "Supervisory" employees) were eligible to membership in the ILGWU and other Labor Unions in the garment industry.

"The other offers of proof referred to, should not, we think, have been rejected. If the issues had been tried before a jury, evidence that employees holding positions similar to those of the employees who were asserted by the Board to be ineligible to union membership, were regarded by the International and other large unions as eligible to union membership, would, in our opinion, have been admissible. We do not mean that the jury would have been bound by such evidence, but that the evidence would tend to indicate that employees holding similar positions were not usually considered by employers and employees in the garment industry to be representatives of the management" (XIII, 50).

The Facts.

At the outset, Respondent calls the Court's attention to five salient facts:

(1) The DGWU was formed and maintained not by a mere majority but by 100% of the working employees of Respondent (X, 3874-5).

(2) The evidence upon which the Trial Examiner's and Board's inferences and findings are based was circumstantial and contrary to the direct testimony and offered testimony of all of Respondent's 1,200 employees (123 F. 2d l. c. 222).

(3) Although the Board bases many of its adverse findings on respondent's alleged "hostility to unions," the Board did not find a single instance of the discharge of an employee because of union affiliations, over the entire period of 1934 to 1942, or ever.

(4) It has been established by several decisions of Federal Courts that the complaining Union, ILGWU, its officials and agents, were at all times pertinent herein, engaged in an unlawful conspiracy and campaign of fraud and violence to compel Respondent to force its employees against their will to join the ILGWU (XII, 4187-4200; 21 F. Supp. 807; 119 F. 2d 892, l. c. 898; 55 F. Supp. 587, l. c. 594).

(5) The Respondent offered to prove that its employees were receiving higher wages and had better working conditions than employees in plants in contractual relations with the ILGWU (I, 201-207).

In order that the Court may have a fair picture of all the circumstances involved in the alleged controversy between Respondent and the ILGWU, and of the issues in the Labor Board hearings, we outline as briefly as possible the facts shown by the evidence and offers of proof:

On November 9, 1936, the ILGWU through its president, David Dubinsky, announced through the press (XI, 4185) a nation-wide drive to bring into the ILGWU all of the 90,000 unorganized garment workers in the nation. This announced program was wholly without regard to the status of wages, hours and working conditions in any particular plant. The plan was to make a clean sweep of every plant, regardless of how equitable the wages, hours and working conditions therein might be. President Dubinsky announced that the ILGWU had $4,000,000 in its treasury, and had appropriated $500,000 of it to finance the campaign. He announced that the ILGWU would open a number of new offices over the country, including a Kansas City office for the particular purpose of concentrating on the Donnelly Garment Company. Dubinsky asserted the St. Louis office would have sufficed for Missouri except that the Union "wants to give Jim Reed a break." He explained that the wife of James A. Reed former Democratic senator from Missouri who supported Governor Landon in the campaign this year, operates the Donnelly Garment Company in Kansas City.

On February 26, 1937, Meyer Perlstein, Southwest Regional Director of the ILGWU, announced in the Kansas City press that the ILGWU plan was to send a letter to the Donnelly Garment Company within the week, demanding a collective bargaining conference; and that if the company ignored the demand, the ILGWU would send out six traveling representatives over the trade territory of the Company, threatening its customers with a boycott. Perlstein said, "Within a year we will have the plant completely organized, and as soon as we have enough members, we will call a strike" (III, 1019).

The public announcement by Perlstein created consternation and fear among the employees of the Donnelly plant (III, 758). On March 2, 1937, three employees, of their own accord and without the knowledge of any officer or supervisory employee of the Donnelly Garment Company (IV, 1290), circulated among the employees, and delivered to Mrs. James A. Reed a statement reading:

> "We, the undersigners, as members of the Donnelly Garment Company, wish to make it known that we are positively happy and contented with the position which we hold with this organization, and refuse to acknowledge any union labor organization. We are thankful for the real humanitarian interest extended to us by our employer, Mrs. Reed."

This statement was signed by 1,183 employees, which embraced all of the workers in the plant except three (V, 1623).

Mrs. Reed, and the officials of the Company testified that they did not know of the circulation of said statement until it was presented to Mrs. Reed at her home on the evening of March 2, 1937 (VII, 2074), and that they did not request anyone to sign such statement or obtain signatures to the same and the publication concerning same in the Kansas City Star was not at their instigation or request (VII, 2076-7, 2434).

On March 6, 1937, David Dubinsky in the course of a speech at Kansas City announced:

> "Reed (meaning the Donnelly Garment Company) will receive a polite letter within a few days inviting him to confer with Kansas City labor leaders about signing a union contract. If he refuses to meet with us we shall start our campaign" (III, 1021).

On March 9, 1937, the "polite letter" was prepared by Southwest Regional Director Perlstein, signed by himself and Wave Tobin (manager of the International's Kansas City office) and mailed to the Donnelly Garment Company. This letter set forth certain alleged "grievances" concerning which Perlstein said he would like to have a "conference" with the Donnelly Garment Company (III, 1022).

The company ignored Perlstein's letter because it was in all material respects a mass of falsehoods (V, 1599). Perlstein and the ILGWU had no authority to represent any of the employees, and the employees were protesting against the company having anything to do with them (V, 1623, 1599).

A few days later the ILGWU circulated among the Donnelly employees as they left the plant a circular containing a copy of the March 9th letter (VII, 2089).

As a build-up to the planned raid on the Donnelly plant and its employees, the ILGWU, on or about March 15, 1937, called strikes against three smaller Kansas City garment manufacturers, the Missouri Garment Company, the Gernes Garment Company and the Gordon Brothers Manufacturing Company ("Justice," April 1, 1937, V, 1523; XI, 4101-4175, incl.; IV, 1241-1275, incl.).

The ILGWU began its raids on these three companies by taking possession of the buildings where the three companies were located. Cots were moved in and mobs of non-employees carried on a program of terrorism and violence. Employees trying to get to their places of work were pulled, hauled, brutally beaten, knocked down, and their clothing stripped off. The plants were closed down (IV, 1220, 1224, 1241-1275; V, 1489; VII, 2084; XI, 4101-4175). Kansas City newspapers practically daily carried articles describing the violence engaged in by the ILGWU (XI, 4101 et seq.). These articles and said violence were the chief topic of conversation among the Donnelly employees and caused them great apprehension concerning their own safety (II, 553, 555).

During this period, representatives of the ILGWU made personal contact with numbers of Donnelly employees and openly boasted to these employees that the violence used in these raids was a mere curtain-raiser in preparation for the big drive on the Donnelly plant and the violence against the Donnelly Company and its employees would be even worse (I, 144; IV, 1221, 1225, 1228).

These raids were conducted by Wave Tobin, under the direct supervision of Meyer Peristein (IV, 1215-16).

She, Wave Tobin, admitted that the methods used by the ILGWU in these raids constituted the ILGWU's "normal routine activities used in organization work" (IV, 1215). Wave Tobin (in the Judge Miller injunction suit) testified as follows (IV, 1216):

> "Q. If there are any differences in the plan of campaign used in the unionization of the Gernes, Gordon and Missouri plants and the plan of campaign which you intended and still intend to follow in the attempt to unionize the Donnelly plant, please state what the differences are?
>
> A. Well in the Donnelly campaign, they intended to use more publicity.
>
> Q. That is one difference. Are there any other differences?
>
> A. None that I know of."

Meyer Perlstein testified in the said Judge Miller case injunction suit as follows (V, 1511):

> "Q. Then we may reasonably expect that these same methods used by the International at the Gordon, Gernes and Missouri strikes, whatever they were, will be continued down at the Donnelly plant, unless this Court grants a permanent injunction, is that true?
>
> A. Yes."

Meyer Perlstein, the Southwest Regional Director of the ILGWU, was in charge of the organizational and strike activities of the ILGWU in Kansas City, St. Louis, Dallas, Texas, and Memphis, Tennessee (V, 1457, 1459). Photographs, testimony, and Court records concerning the ILGWU's raids on garment companies in those cities portray the violence used by the ILGWU, including the stripping of women workers naked in the public streets, inflicting bodily injury, and other brutalities (IV, 1302, 1305). Perlstein was tried and convicted in Dallas, Texas, of having conspired to have a woman employee of the Morton-

Davis Company stripped naked in the public street (V, 1477). He served his sentence (V, 1483, 1527).

Perlstein (at this time in Dallas) made a speech, stating:

> "I believe that if the government ever dares to do what the manufacturers are doing, I will tell my sons to take up arms against the government" (V, 1478).

The ILGWU's chief officers and general executive board ratified, approved and lauded the tactics used in these raids. The Report of the 1937 Annual Convention of the ILGWU stated:

> "The Dallas dress strike which lasted from March until November, 1935, will occupy a place of honor in the annals of our union" (V, 1546).

On March 18, 1937, after the ILGWU strike at the Gordon, Gernes, and Missouri Garment Companies in Kansas City, Missouri, had begun, the employees of the Donnelly Garment Company held a meeting to discuss what they could do to protect themselves (II, 553). The meeting was called by Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton, and other Donnelly employees on their own initiative and without any suggestion or inducement on the part of Respondent or the Loyalty League (II, 555). Said meeting was held after working hours on premises not leased or controlled by Respondent (II, 453; X, 3867, note 34), but in the same building in which Respondent's plant is located. Various individual employees made suggestions with respect to defending themselves against the threatened violence. Near the end of the meeting it was suggested that Mrs. Reed be asked to come to the meeting and tell what she and the Company would do to protect the employees (II, 554, 657-8). She came and made a short talk stating that she would do everything she could to protect the employees against violence. She further stated that it was their own business whether they should or should not join a union, but that she was not going to be intimidated by Mr. Dubinsky into forcing the employees to join the ILGWU against their will (III, 1029-31). Mrs. Reed left the meeting immediately after she finished her talk (II, 679). The meeting was attended voluntarily and the employees were not instructed to attend same by any officer, executive, or person held out by Respondent to represent, speak, and/or act for it with respect to labor matters or by any person with authority to hire, discipline or discharge employees (Ex. 1-0000, III, 759). When the second employee witness for respondent was called, the Trial Examiner ruled that no further testimony would be received relative to the March 18th meeting (II, 610d). The stenographer's transcript of Mrs. Reed's talk appears in full in Footnote 3 to the opinion of the court below (XII, 31-32).

We quote herewith the last three paragraphs which contain the parts of her speech to which the Labor Board takes exception:

> "I know you are thinking about the threats of violence that the Union is making against you and the company. I want to say that the Company and I intend to do everything possible to protect you in case of any violence. We are now trying to make arrangements with the street car company for its busses to go to certain points and pick you people up and bring you to the plant. We will let you know about this as soon as arrangements can be made.
>
> "Many of you have been here for a number of years and you know that you have never been asked whether or not you belong to a union. The company has not discriminated against anyone on that account and Mr. Dubinsky is not going to make me discriminate against employees because they would not belong to his Union. If you want to belong that is your own business and it is up to you to decide. I will say that neither Dubinsky or any other buttinsky is going to intimidate me or the Company into forcing you to join the International Union against your will.

"I can't say at this time what will be done to protect you against violence, but the company's attorneys will consider what legal steps might be advisable. In any event, you can understand that the company will not submit to any unlawful attacks lying down."

Several days after this meeting a group of employees called on the Director of Police of Kansas City and appealed for protection (II, 585).

Shortly thereafter Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton and Sally Ormsby, after informal conversations with other employees, consulted the law firm of Gossett, Ellis, Dietrich and Tyler of Kansas City for advice. Mr. Frank E. Tyler of that firm discussed the advisability of an injunction suit and requested a retainer fee of $500 (II, 555-6).

Knowing the view of the other employees the committee decided to borrow sufficient money to pay Mr. Tyler's retainer fee and other expenses which might arise (II, 557). Rose Todd explained the facts to Mr. Ed Swinney, president of the First National Bank of Kansas City, Missouri (II, 718v), whom she had known for a long period of time. The bank loaned her $1,000 which was evidenced by a promissory note executed in the name of the Loyalty League by Rose Todd. The undisputed testimony is that Rose Todd merely used the name of the Loyalty League as a matter of convenience, and was never authorized by the Loyalty League to borrow the money in its behalf (I, 251). The undisputed testimony further shows that after making the loan Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton and other employees, at a meeting of employes on March 30, 1937, requested and received contributions of fifty cents each from substantially all of the employees and turned said monies over to the treasurer of the Loyalty League to apply on the said loan (I, 250; II, 586-8, 599). However, said monies so raised were slightly in excess of Mr. Tyler's fee and the excess amount was later used for the payment of rental on chairs used by the employees at meetings which were wholly distinct from the Loyalty League (I, 282a). There is not a scintilla of evidence that respondent paid or contributed directly or indirectly one cent to the payment of Mr. Tyler's fee; or paid or contributed one cent to the Loyalty League during its entire existence (II, 378bb); or paid or contributed one cent to employees for the purpose of holding any meetings or taking any action with respect to the ILGWU or any other labor organization (II, 489-490). Nor had Respondent or any of its officers had any knowledge concerning the loaning of said $1,000 or of the giving of said note until the same was disclosed in Court.

Meanwhile the Gernes, Gordon, and Missouri Garment Companies strikes were continuing and Meyer Perlstein in an article in the publication styled "Justice," being the official publication of ILGWU, made this statement concerning the three companies:

> "These three firms will soon have union shops. If not, they will never again manufacture dresses" (V, 1492).

On or about April 12, 1937, this Court sustained the National Labor Relations Act. After this decision, Mr. Tyler discussed with employees the advisability of the employees forming a plant union for their own protection (I, 61, 64-5; II, 558-9).

On or about April 22, 1937, an article appeared in the Kansas City press, to wit:

"Donnelly Worker Will Be Sent To Union Convention.

Garment Organization Seeking Support for Strike at Plant

Sylvia Hull, an employe of the Donnelly Garment company, has been named a delegate from Kansas City to the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union biennial convention, May 3 at Atlantic City, Meyer Perlstein, regional director, announced Thursday.

The Donnelly worker, according to Perlstein, was one of a committee from that garment company who appeared Wednesday night before a joint group representing various Kansas City locals and requested representation at the national convention.

Perlstein said the Donnelly committee desired one of their number to appear at the convention and ask the International body to indorse and support a strike against their employer for failure to negotiate a contract for higher wages, shorter hours and improved conditions. The Kansas City joint committee, Perlstein asserted, agreed to pay all expenses of the Donnelly delegate" (III, 1015).

This notice caused considerable ill-feeling among the employees because Sylvia Hull had not been authorized to represent them. Sylvia Hull, in the Judge Miller Case, testified that she was called to a hotel by Perlstein and asked if she would go to Atlantic City, New Jersey, to attend the ILGWU's convention; that no committee of Donnelly employees had asked her to represent them; that she did not know at the time of any ILGWU member in the Donnelly plant except one girl. She further testified that nothing was said about calling a strike at the Donnelly plant for failure to negotiate a contract for higher wages, shorter hours, and improved conditions. She further testified that the article was given to the press for publication (V, 1555-1563).

On the morning following the publication of the aforesaid article, there was a spontaneous demonstration by the employees against Sylvia Hull on account of said statements in the paper. She was not harmed or touched and voluntarily went home (II, 536).

Thereafter, within a few days, Sylvia Hull went to Atlantic City, New Jersey, and attended the convention of the ILGWU. The ILGWU paid her expenses (V, 1565). At the convention, she delivered a speech containing false and malicious statements concerning respondent and requested the convention to vote funds to support a strike at respondent's plant, the said speech being written by someone whom Sylvia Hull could not identify (V, 1569-1574).

Mrs. Hyde, employment manager of respondent, attempted repeatedly to reach Sylvia Hull on the telephone on instructions of Mr. Baty but was unable to do so. Sylvia Hull admitted that she never communicated with respondent after her return from Atlantic City, New Jersey, but went to work at once for the ILGWU as a paid organizer (V, 1564-5). She even testified that she did not desire to return to the Donnelly plant except under union conditions, meaning a closed shop under the ILGWU (V, 1580). The Board was compelled to find that under all the circumstances that respondent did not refuse to reinstate her within the meaning of Section 8 (3) of the Act.

On or about April 27, 1937, approximately 100 per cent of respondent's employees, with the exception of officers, executives and supervisory employees with the authority to hire, discipline or discharge, voluntarily, without pressure, suggestion or inducement, directly or indirectly, on the part of the company, its officers, executives or any persons held out by respondent to represent, speak for, or act in any manner for it with respect to labor matters, or any persons with authority to hire, discipline or discharge (I, 194-196), attended a meeting of employees called by the employees after working hours on premises not leased or controlled by the Donnelly Company, and after discussion by numerous employees of the threatened violence of the ILGWU and of the attempt of Sylvia Hull and the ILGWU to represent them without authority and after a talk by Mr. Tyler, their attorney, regarding their rights under the National Labor Relations Act, freely and voluntarily voted unanimously to organize a labor union and to name it Donnelly Garment Workers' Union. They also unanimously elected officers and a bargaining committee (I, 54-59; II, 558-561).

The employees decided on this action for their own protection and no official, executive, or supervisory employee of Respondent with authority to hire, discipline, or discharge, or any person held out by Respondent to represent, serve, and or act for Respondent with respect to labor matters was present at said meeting or at any other meeting of said DGWU, nor at any time suggested, advised, influenced, or instructed the employees to organize or maintain a union (I, 191, 194-5; KK, 561). The Respondent has never directly or indirectly made contribution to said union, financial or otherwise (I, 230; VII, 2094). All meetings of the DGWU were held outside of working hours (VIII, 2752, 2939, 2987; X, 3605, 3709, 3713, 3720, 3724, 3729, 3734, 3740, 3742, 3745, 3754, 3764, 3767-68-69; 3770).

The Board's witness, Mrs. Weilert, testified (X, 3605): "We got off at the early time, 10 after 4, and the meeting didn't take up until 5, the regular meeting." Up to the latter part of May, 1937, the meetings were held on property not belonging to or controlled by the Company, and after said date, the Union paid rent to the Company for the space in which it held its meetings. (I, 130-131, 227; X, 3867, note 34).

The following day, Rose Todd, who had been unanimously elected chairman of the bargaining committee, took the union's membership cards to Mrs. Reed and advised her of the action of the employees in unanimously organizing a labor union and in unanimously selecting a committee to bargain with respondent concerning the terms and conditions of their employment (I, 196-7). Rose Todd stated that Mrs. Reed said that petitioner would give consideration to proposals of the DGWU (I, 80a-80c). Mr. Tyler, attorney for the DGWU, commenced to draft a contract to present to respondent (I, 89).

The committee asked Mr. Baty, plant manager of Respondent, to furnish it with certain information for use in preparing the proposed contract (I, 197). On May 27, 1937, a proposed draft of contract was presented to Mrs. Reed. She conferred with Mr. Baty, plant manager, Mr. Keyes, sales manager, and with Senator Reed and Mr. Ingraham, attorneys for the Company, and several others, concerning the proposed draft (I, 85). A number of modifications were made in the hand writing of Senator Reed (XI, 4105-4123; VII, 2100-2110) and the modified draft was then taken up with the committee and Mr. Tyler, its attorney; the contract was fully discussed as so changed, and further modifications were made. When finally satisfactory to the parties it was executed (VII, 2108-9). It provided for a minimum wage, 8-hour day and 40-hour week.

promotion and seniority rights, recognition of the union as the sole bargaining agency for the employees, procedure concerning complaints and grievances, meal period, closed shop, lay offs, time spent by general chairman on union matters, arbitration, strikes, stoppage and lock-outs, employer's right to reduce number of employees and discharge employees for business reasons and not for union affiliations, vacations, privilege of continuing sick, accident and group life insurance previously contracted for, maintenance by respondent of two trained nurses and hospital room at plant (Board's Ex. 6, III, 807). After further negotiations, extending for a period of approximately thirty days, a supplemental contract was entered into on June 22, 1937, covering rates of pay and classifying employees into groups and providing absolute minimum wages for the respective groups (Board's Ex. 7, III, 812). These minimums ranged from $16.50 to $42.50 for the various kinds of work. The lowest minimum wage for any employee, even bundle boys or messenger boys, was $16.50 per week. Said contracts provide for more favorable wages, rates of pay, and other conditions of employment than are contained in any contracts entered into between the ILGWU and other garment manufacturers in the house dress and wash frock industry (V, 1429-1456). The terms and conditions of said contracts have at all times been fully complied with and all complaints thereunder have been adjusted by the parties (I, 234-238a).

In the latter part of May, 1937, Perlstein gave out another public statement in the Kansas City papers. This time he announced that the ILGWU's campaign against the Donnelly Garment Company would be opened with advertising through the press and over the radio, urging a boycott of Donnelly by retailers and consumers. He announced that six girls were being specially trained to visit all retailers selling Donnelly products (of whom there are 1,800); that these six agents would travel from coast to coast, urging a boycott. He announced that if the retailers refused to accede to this boycott demand, their stores would, in turn, be picketed; that is to say he threatened a secondary boycott. He announced that "we are ready to spend $250,000 to accomplish our goal, and that amount is ready" (V, 1525, 1503-1507).

On June 9, 1937, the ILGWU ran full page advertisements in the Kansas City papers addressed to the Donnelly Garment Company. The gist of these advertisements is summarized in these excerpts:

> "As practical business people, you, we take it for granted, realize that, whatever your feelings for the moment may be, you will eventually have to carry on collective dealings with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, which cannot, should not and will not permit one individual employer to segregate himself from the rest of the industry in matters of work conditions and other fundamentals of employment. * * * It still lies within your choice to avoid a conflict which may prove as costly as it appears futile at this stage, to all sides involved in it. Your readiness to meet us in this endeavor in a spirit of industrial statemanship, rather than in that of guerilla warfare, will be applauded by every constructive factor in the entire dress industry, and by the industry, in general, the country over" (V, 1543-4).

By this time the ILGWU's six representatives were traversing the country, urging retailers to boycott Donnelly products, and threatening, if they refused, to conduct a secondary boycott of the retailers themselves, and to picket their stores. These women were traveling over many states, including Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee, Kansas, Missouri, Ohio and Indiana (V, 1497-1505).

These traveling emissaries distributed many thousand printed circulars (V, 1504). On the cover of the circular in large type was the legend: "WE DO NOT PATRONIZE NELLY DON DRESS." The circular contained a number of false statements, such as these: (1) that the Donnelly Garment Company's "wage scale is far below that prevailing everywhere else in the industry"; (2) that the Donnelly plant uses the "speed-up system"; and (3) that most of the Donnelly workers are constantly in "a state of exhaustion and fatigue," requiring "constant medical attention because of the nervous strain imposed upon them by this system" and that "numerous workers suffer complete nervous breakdowns" (IV, 1183-1189).

The falsity of the above statements appears from the uncontroverted testimony of the employees of the Donnelly plant and by a comparison of the Donnelly contracts with the contracts of every manufacturer in Kansas City with whom the ILGWU has a contract (VI, 1653-1674), findings of Federal Courts (V, 1616d-1616h; 21 F. Supp. 807; 55 F. Supp. 1. c. 594),

The trial examiner received in evidence voluminous portions of testimony taken in an old NRA Case relating to matters alleged to have occurred in 1934, some five years prior to the issuance of the complaint herein. Respondent objected to the introduction of said testimony for the reason that the alleged occurrences were so remote in point of time as to be immaterial and were irrelevant because they occurred prior to the effective date of the National Labor Relations Act (III, 1110a; IV, 1336).

Subject to such objections, the parties stipulated (III, 740) that the testimony taken in said NRA hearing and in the injunction hearing before Federal Judge Andrew Miller, might be introduced in the Labor Board hearing. The Trial Examiner overruled Respondent's objections.

However, the Trial Examiner qualified his ruling (A, 509) to the effect that "acceptance of the evidence is not intended to * * * reverse rulings heretofore made with respect to the introduction of evidence upon certain subjects," thereby depriving respondent of the benefit of such testimony favorable to it. He refused to clarify or change this ruling (A, 463-4, 467).

The undisputed evidence shows that in 1934, the fifteen employees named in the NRA complaint were part of a group of 295 employees laid off by respondent because of a drastic drop in business. Respondent did not know of their union affiliation at the time of such layoff (V, 1600). Eight of these fifteen employees were recalled when business picked up in the fall of 1934 (VII, 2072; IV, 1158-60; V, 1600). Six of the other seven testified in the NRA case. All except one testified that at the time of their layoff they were not members of the ILGWU and the one who was a member kept it secret and the Company did not know it (V, 1600). Three claimed discrimination because they were transferred to an auxiliary plant operated by respondent at 26th and Walnut, which they thought was not nearly so nice as the main plant (IV, 1130d). On cross-examination they admitted they had worked at the auxiliary plant long before they even thought of joining the union (IV, 1134-5, 1127). One of said witnesses claimed that she was discriminated against because she had once or twice had to match shades of material (IV, 1126s).

The NRA case was never decided as the Supreme Court held the National Recovery Act unconstitutional before the trial was finally terminated.

The Examiner in Note 25 to his Intermediate Report states (X, 3860):

> "The undersigned makes no findings with respect to the reasons for these discharges which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act—and which are not presently in issue."

The sole and only issue involved in the said NRA proceeding was whether or not respondent had discharged the complainants on account of their union affiliation.

The Examiner recognizes the impropriety of passing upon the alleged discharges in 1934 (X, 3860, foot-note 25), but in the next breath holds that respondent was guilty of discrimination in 1934 (X, 3863), and thereon finds respondent "hostile to unions."

The Board finds the Nelly Don Loyalty League, which was organized in 1935, to be the predecessor of the DGWU (X, 3873), and that the Respondent used the Loyalty League in the formation of the plant union (X, 3886). The testimony and offered testimony of all the employees is that the Loyalty League was purely a social organization, that it never performed any of the functions of a labor union nor did it ever seek to do so; that it did not exact dues from its members or hold regular meetings; that it had no connection with the DGWU and continued to exist after the formation of the DGWU; that it did not assist or participate in any way in the formation or maintenance of the DGWU; and there is no evidence that the Respondent or any of its officials, exerted or attempted to exert any force or coercion upon the employees through the Loyalty League to promote the formation of the DGWU; that the Loyalty League and the DGWU have always been wholly distinct and separate, with wholly distinct purposes (I, 187; II, 561, 622, 643, 652, 676, 678-678a; VIII, 2581-2, 2632, 2718, 2727, 2777-8, 2860, 2979; IX, 3011, 3052, 3090, 3129-30, 3196, 3362-3; III, 743, 764).

The Board finds that the instructors, thread girls, Hobart Atherton and certain other employees had supervisory authority (X, 3854, 3858-9). The overwhelming testimony was to the contrary (VII, 2117-18; VIII, 2584, 2586-7, 2731, 2779, 2861, 2864, 2934-5, 3000; IX, 3019-20, 3046, 3059-60, 3078; 3092-3-4, 3097, 3122, 3136, 3195, 3206-7-8). Respondent offered to prove that employees in ILGWU plants occupying the same or similar positions were members of the ILGWU and that such employees were not regarded as supervisory employees but were eligible to membership in the ILGWU and other garment unions (X, 3787-3792). The Trial Examiner refused to receive this evidence (X, 3782-3). The testimony showed that the instructors had no authority to hire, discipline, discharge, or exercise any supervisory authority over other employees but that their work was merely to show the operators how to perform the various sewing operations, based on complete written instructions prepared in the general office (II, 391-2, 450-1; VII, 2120). The Labor Board found that Respondent had a checkoff agreement with the DGWU (X, 3880). The undisputed evidence was that the DGWU asked the Respondent to agree to a checkoff and that the Respondent refused to do so (I, 226-7, 131-2, 283; VII, 2413, 2387-8). Later, the individual employees requested Respondent to check off their dues and Respondent thereafter did so with respect to those employees who individually requested such action in writing (I, 234-5, 276-7).

The Board finds Respondent agreed to a closed shop. The evidence shows that Mrs. Reed did not want a closed shop at first (VII, 2387), but the DGWU was demanding a closed shop and Mrs. Reed yielded on condition that it should not interfere with her choice of the hiring of employees (VII, 2097).

Finally, the Board finds that typewriters, mimeograph machines, desk, and other minor facilities or equipment belonging to Respondent had been used by officers of the DGWU (I, 59-60, 108). It is the undisputed evidence that Respondent did not know of the use of any of the aforesaid facilities and equipment, and never at any time consented to the use of the same (I, 62, 62a; II, 406-7, 411, 431, 468-9; VII, 2113, 2115).

The Board in its amended complaint charged that petitioner had discriminatorily discharged two employees, May Fike and Sylvia Hull on account of their union affilations. (In a prior amended complaint, Par. 4A, it had charged that respondent had discriminatorily discharged 18 other named employes (A, 423), but later (on respondent's motion, Ex. 1-TTT, A, 428), dismissed those charges as to all 18 employes (A, 506).) The Board in its original decision dismissed the charge as to Sylvia Hull but found the company guilty of refusing to reinstate May Fike on account of her union affiliations. The Board in its last decision, found that neither Sylvia Hull nor May Fike was entitled to reinstatement (X, 3890, 3892).

The respondent and intervener DGWU repeatedly requested the Labor Board and Trial Examiner to hold a secret election, if there was any question as to the free choice of the employes, but the Board and Trial Examiner refused to do so (A, 395, 409-414, 560).

The circumstances leading up to the filing of the Labor Board Complaint herein are enlightening.

Respondent, on July 5, 1937, had instituted an injunction suit against the ILGWU, its agents and officers, in the United States District Court for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri, under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, to enjoin the Defendants from continuing the conspiracy and campaign of fraud, threatened violence, and secondary boycott against Respondent for the purpose of compelling Respondent to force its employes into the ILGWU (A, 390). In this suit respondent alleged that the ILGWU and its agents were engaged in the unlawful acts hereinabove referred to.

A trial was had commencing November 1, 1937, before three United States federal judges. The Honorable Arba S. VanValkenburgh, Circuit Judge, and the Honorable Albert L. Reeves, District Judge, found in favor of respondent and the Honorable Merrill E. Otis found in favor of the defendants on the technical ground that the provisions of the Norris-La Guardia Act had not been complied with. However, Judge Otis stated: "An overwhelming showing, justifying an injunction under the law as it was, certainly has been made." 21 F. Supp. 807, l. c. 831.

The Supreme Court of the United States held that the case was not properly a three-judge case and remanded the same for a new trial. 304 U. S. 243, 82 L. Ed. 1316 (A, 390-1).

A short time prior to the new trial before a single District Judge the Regional Director of the Labor Board requested a conference on the matter (V, 1595).

Conferences between the Labor Board, respondent, the representatives of the DGWU and the ILGWU were held (V, 1385-1409, 1595). Representatives of the Labor Board advised respondent that unless it acceded to the demands of the ILGWU a complaint would be filed, and long and expensive hearings would be held (V, 1406).

The Regional Director of the Labor Board requested the Respondent, the ILGWU, and the DGWU to put their proposals in writing (V, 1409). This was done on February 4, 1938 (V, 1606-1616).

As one of the requirements of the ILGWU for a settlement was that Respondent should agree not to recognize a plant union (V, 1607), the Respondent was unable to accede to the demands of the Labor Board and ILGWU, as compliance therewith would be a violation of the National Labor Relations Act. The ILGWU in its written proposal demanded the disestablishment of the DGWU and agreed that it would

> First: To cease all activities of every kind and character which tend to keep anyone from purchasing any of the products of the Donnelly Garment Company, so long as the Donnelly Garment Company does not recognize any plant union as the bargaining representative of its employees (V, 1607).

Said proposal required respondent to violate the plain terms of the National Labor Relations Act and to deny their employees the right guaranteed by the law to designate their own representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining.

Respondent advised that it could not legally and lawfully accept the proposal of the ILGWU (V, 1615-16).

On March 21, 1939, the trial of the injunction suit was commenced before the Honorable Andrew Miller, United States District Judge (A, 394), and shortly thereafter the Labor Board filed its written complaint against Respondent.

Upon a full hearing of the case, Judge Miller found in favor of the Respondent on all points (V, 1616a-1616j) and on April 27, 1939, granted a permanent injunction against the Defendant (V, 1616k). The Regional Director of the Labor Board was in close touch with the trial and on learning of the result adverse to the ILGWU, the Regional Director on that same day, April 27, 1939, filed an amended complaint against Respondent (A, 374) and the Labor Board proceeded to a hearing thereon.

The Injunction Case was appealed by the Defendants to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and while the case was pending on appeal, this Court decided the case of Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 301 U. S. 501, dealing with suits under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. On the strength of that decision the Circuit Court of Appeals held that Judge Miller did not have jurisdiction to grant an injunction under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, but remanded the case to the District Court where the petition was amended so as to allege diversity of citizenship and a further trial on the merits was later held before Judge Nordbye in 1944. Judge Nordbye in his opinion severely castigated the Defendants for their unlawful acts but declined to issue an injunction, for the reason that a period of seven years had elapsed since the acts complained of were committed and because he believed a sufficient showing had not been made that the police officers were unable to furnish protection against the threatened violence (55 Fed. Supp. 587, l. c. 594, 596-7). One federal court after another found that the violence, fraud, and boycotts were committed as charged. The three-judge court so found; Judge Miller so found; the Circuit Court of appeals held that Judge Miller's findings of fact were "sustained by substantial evidence" and except for lack of jurisdiction under the holding in the Apex Case, "the decree with some modifications should be affirmed" (ILGWU v. Donnelly Garment Co., 119 F. 2d 892, 898). And, finally, Judge Nordbye held (55 F. Supp. l. c. 594):

> "But that the strikers were the instigators of violence on frequent occasions cannot be gainsaid. The employees who wished to work were beaten and their dresses torn. They were disgracefully treated. * * * That Perlstein knew of and condoned the violence is evident * * *. The same observation may be made with reference to Wave Tobin. * * * Much space might be used in reciting the specific acts of violence and other circumstances which occurred in the strikes referred to, and the severest condemnation of the tactics approved or condoned by Perlstein and Tobin is entirely justified."

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

Respondent's brief is divided into two parts. Part One deals with the grounds upon which the court below based its decision, to-wit, that the Board denied respondent a fair trial and due process. Part Two deals with the merits, i. e., that the Board's order is not supported by the evidence—a question not passed on by the court below.

PART ONE.

The decision below should be affirmed for the following reasons:

I. The Court below, in refusing to enforce the Board's order, did not abuse the power and discretion vested in it by Congress.

(a) The Court was "not in error" in ruling that the Board should have received and considered the offered evidence.

The Board, at the first hearing, refused to receive or consider the testimony of respondent's employes (some 1,200), as to how and why they formed the plant union (DGWU) and that they did so voluntarily, without any coercion or interference by respondent. The court below, on the first appeal, held this testimony material, and remanded the case to the Board to receive and consider it. The Board received some employe evidence at the second hearing, but refused to accord any materiality to it, thereby flaunting the court's mandate. The court held on the second appeal that this evidence "received no different or greater consideration upon the second hearing than it did upon the first, and that it was disregarded in both hearings." Respondent contends that the court was "not in error" in so holding.

The Board, at both the first and second hearings refused to receive or consider several different types of evidence offered by respondent and the DGWU. The Court held that this evidence was material and should have been received and considered by the Board. Respondent contends that the court was "not in error" in so holding.

By reason of all the foregoing, the court held that respondent had been denied a fair trial and due process and refused to enforce the Board's order. Respondent contends that the court was "not in error" in so ruling, and that its decision should not be disturbed by this court, in the absence of an abuse of discretion.

(b) The Court was "not in error" in ruling that the Board should have designated a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing.

(c) In any event, the Court's rulings were not so completely wrong as to constitute an abuse of the Court's judicial power and discretion.

PART TWO.

The decision below should be affirmed because the Board's order is not supported by any substantial evidence:

"A."

The direct evidence is overwhelming that Respondent's employees formed and operated the DGWU of their own free will and accord without any coercion or interference by Respondent.

"B."

The circumstantial evidence of the Board is contrary to the overwhelming direct testimony and does not support the Board's findings and conclusions.

Under this heading, Respondent discusses the principal findings upon which the Board's order is based, to-wit:

The March 18th meeting was a voluntary employee-activity to consider means for protecting themselves against threatened violence by the ILGWU and was not promoted or participated in by respondent or the management, and that Mrs. Reed's talk at said meeting, at the request of the employes, was not coercive and well within the constitutional right of free speech.

The instructors, "thread" girls, Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton, and others, whom the Board finds to be "supervisory employes" were not such, were not held out as such by respondent nor considered as such by the employes, and their duties were not of a "supervisory" nature, they had no power to hire, fire, promote, or speak for the management in labor union matters, and did not do so, but were eligible to membership in a union and their activities were all on behalf of themselves and other employes as such and not for the management.

The Loyalty League was a social organization, and in no sense a labor organization, and was not used by respondent as a means of coercing the employes in union matters (as the Board finds).

The "March 2d statement" was conceived by two girls in the order filling department, prepared and circulated by them and by one other girl who heard of it, among the employes on March 2, 1937, without the knowledge or consent of respondent or the management, and was a purely voluntary activity on the part of the employes and not chargeable to respondent, and was a legitimate employe-activity, under the terms of the National Labor Relations Act.

The respondent had no part in the organizational meeting of the plant union (DGWU) on April 27th, and did not interfere in any way with the employes in the forming or joining of that union.

The Board cites the occasional use of a company typewriter, ditto machine, etc. by officials of the DGWU in its work. Such use was without the knowledge or consent of respondent or its officials and was inconsequential in nature, and did not constitute any domination or interference by respondent.

The Board finds that respondent dominated the DGWU by promptly recognizing it and dealing with it as bargaining agency for the employes. This was respondent's express duty under the Act, as the union represented not merely a majority but virtually 100% of its employes and was demanding recognition; and the bargaining was not unduly hasty in any event.

Respondent by agreeing with the DGWU to a closed shop did not dominate or interfere with the rights of its employees, as they requested the closed shop through their union, and they all belonged to the union making such request.

The respondent did not violate the Act or interfere with or dominate its employes by virtue of the appointment by the union of Rose Todd, Mrs. Nichols and Miss Spalito on the committee to fix piece-work prices, as the union made such appointments, as they had a right to do, and respondent had no right to dictate whom they should appoint, or to interfere in any way therewith, and did not.

The demonstrations by employes against Sylvia Hull and Fern Sigler, co-employes, on April 23d, 1937, were voluntary demonstrations by the employes, due to misrepresentations that Sylvia was representing the Donnelly employes at the ILGWU convention in Atlantic City; respondent had nothing to do with initiating or encouraging the demonstrations.

but quelled same as quickly as possible and sent the employes back to work; Sylvia Hull volunteered to go home, and she never sought to return, although asked to do so by respondent. Respondent is not chargeable with said demonstrations.

The Board's findings as to respondent's alleged "hostility to unions", are not supported by the evidence.

The Board's order to reimburse employes for dues checked off is not supported by the evidence. The union asked for a check-off arrangement and respondent refused it. Later, at the individual requests of employes, respondent checked off their individual dues. The respondent did not seek the check-off, and under the circumstances here shown, the Board's order is punitive, not remedial, and the check-off is proper in any event, as the DGWU is the bona-fide choice of the employes.

The Board's findings are based on conjecture, speculation and far-fetched inferences from tenuous circumstances, contrary to the overwhelming direct evidence, and made in total disregard of respondent's evidence, and hence do not rise to the stature of substantial evidence.

The Board's findings, conclusions and order are contrary to the authorities.

The decision of the court below should be affirmed for the reason that the Board's order is not supported by the evidence.

ARGUMENT.

PART ONE.

I.

The Court Below Did Not Abuse Its Power and Discretion in Refusing Enforcement of the Board's Order.

In National Labor Relations Board v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9, this court said (at p. 28):

> "But courts which are required upon a limited review to lend their enforcement powers to the Board's orders are granted some discretion to see that the hearings out of which the conclusive findings emanate do not shut off a party's right to produce evidence or conduct cross examination material to the issue. * * * Findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support, its findings, is heard and weighed."

and at p. 16:

> "Thus, in order to decide this case in favor of the Board we would have to hold not merely that the evidence of dynamiting would be a matter of indifference in our view of the case, but that the court designated by statute to exercise discretion in the matter and which desired to know the facts about it before passing on the sufficiency of the evidence and the impartiality of the examiner and which thought the finder of the facts should hear and consider such evidence, must not only have been in error but must also have abused its judicial discretion."

The foregoing ruling is applicable here.

Here, the court below found that the excluded evidence was material, that the "employee" testimony "received no different or greater consideration upon the second hearing than it did upon the first and that it was disregarded in both hearings" (XIII, 44), and that a different Trial Examiner should have been designated for the second hearing.

These are findings of "fact" or at least mixed findings of fact and law. Upon these findings and under the Indiana and Michigan case, supra, the decision of the court below should not be reversed unless the Court below "not only is in error" but also unless the bases of its decision are so utterly groundless that it has "abused its judicial power and discretion."

Neither of such conditions exists here:

(a)

THE COURT BELOW WAS "NOT IN ERROR" IN RULING THAT THE BOARD SHOULD HAVE RECEIVED AND CONSIDERED THE PROFFERED EVIDENCE.

The Court below bases its decision as to the exclusion of evidence on the Board's refusal to receive and consider evidence as to six different matters (XIII, 40-50).

This Court's ruling in the Indiana and Michigan case, supra (l. c. 16), would apply if only one material class or item of evidence had been excluded by the Board. We submit that the Court below was right as to all six classes. Each of these types of evidence was directly relevant and material to some phase of the case as to which Board made findings adverse to respondent. We briefly discuss the various types of evidence which the Board failed to receive or consider:

(1) Refusal of Board to consider as material the employees' testimony, as directed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in its former decision.

The Court below in its previous opinion (123 F. 2d 215) held that the testimony and offered testimony of the "1,200 employees" of respondent (III, 743-763), as to "how and why" they came to form and join the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union and that they did so freely and without any domination, coercion or interference by the employer, was competent and material testimony and should have been received and considered by the Board.

In N. L. R. B. v. Indiana & M. E. Co., 318 U. S. 9, this Court said (l. c. 28):

> "The statute demands respect for the judgment of the Board as to what the evidence proves. But the court is given discretion to see that before a party's rights are finally foreclosed his case has been fairly heard. Findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support, its findings, is heard and weighed."

In Rait v. Federal Land Bank, (C. C. A. 8) 135 F. 2d 447, the Court said, concerning the obligation resting on a conciliation commissioner to consider evidence (l. c. 451):

> "* * * it does impose upon him the obligation to consider fairly and to weigh all the competent evidence offered * * * and not arbitrarily ignore or to reject such evidence."

The same Trial Examiner, James C. Batten, who conducted the first hearing, was designated by the Board to conduct the second hearing. Respondent objected strenuously to Batten's designation, for the reason that Batten had prejudged this evidence against Respondent and had expressed so emphatically at the first hearing his conviction that this testimony was entirely worthless, that it was apparent that he could not fairly evaluate it or in fact give it any weight or consideration. The error of the Board in refusing to designate a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing is discussed herein under I(b), infra, but attention is called to this fact, here, as it obviously has an important bearing on this question as to whether the Trial Examiner and Board failed to consider the employees' testimony.

Batten, on the second hearing, received the testimony of some 11 employee witnesses, when counsel for the Board objected to further employee testimony. Thereupon this colloquy took place (IX, 3251-2-3):

> "Trial Examiner Batten: * * * Now, Mr. Ingraham, what is the position of respondent, that is, with respect to employee witnesses?
>
> Mr. Ingraham: Well, we are preparing to continue offering testimony of employee witnesses.
>
> Trial Examiner Batten: To what extent?
>
> Mr. Ingraham: Well until your Honor—
>
> Trial Examiner Batten (interrupting): Well, until I stop you, is that it?
>
> Mr. Ingraham: Yes (p. 3251). * * *
>
> Miss Weyand: I quite agree with the Trial Examiner's view that enough witnesses have been heard to get a fair sampling of what is the view of the employee witnesses which the Company has offered, and what they have testified to. I think that further witnesses are unnecessary, especially when considered in connection with the number of witnesses whose testimony appeared in the record before we started the hearing on the remand (p. 3252).
>
> Mr. Langsdale: Well, it occurs to me that nothing could be added to the view of the Respondent, or the Intervener either by witness after witness * * * and the testimony of each one of them is about the same. Now what can be gained by putting on 11 more or 100 more or 200 more, I don't see. Of course, that is their problem.

Trial Examiner Batten: Is there anything further? Well if not I think I shall rule at this time that as far as the offers of proof are concerned, and the employee witnesses are concerned, with respect to the respondent, that I have heard sufficient; that anything further would be cumulative, and any addition wouldn't enable the Examiner or the Board or the Circuit Court to get any better picture of the entire situation, the light of the entire hearing, the entire record and exhibits" (p. 3253).

Respondent and Intervener DGWU offered to prove by all members of the DGWU that there was no coercion by Respondent (Board's Exh. I-0000, III, 743-758; I-RRRR, III, 764-781; I-XXXXX, X 3829-34; IX, 3290, 3265). Later Respondent made an additional similar offer of proof (Board's Exh. I-VVVVV, X, 3792) of employee testimony, which the Trial Examiner also rejected (X, 3783).

Testimony Not Considered "In Good Faith."

We do not argue that all 1,200 witnesses should have been permitted to take the stand; but that the testimony of those who did testify as to such matters should have been accepted by the Board as being material to the issues and should have been fairly weighed and considered by the Board as material, in accordance with the previous opinion of the Court below, and that the offered testimony of the remaining 1,200 employees having been rejected as cumulative, should have been considered as though the "1,200 witnesses" had actually testified thereto (as Judge Riddick held XIII, 53). But the Trial Examiner and the Board refused to regard this evidence as having any materiality whatsoever. The Trial Examiner repeatedly said in the first trial that it was wholly worthless and he would not consider it (A, 484-5-6-7, 492-3).

In the second hearing, although he permitted eleven employee witnesses to testify and it was conceded that the remaining 1,200 employees would testify substantially the same way, this overwhelming proof did not move him one jot or tittle and he blandly finds in his second Intermediate Report, as in his first, that the employees were "coerced" by the employer into forming the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, thereby necessarily holding that each and all of these 1,200 witnesses either committed perjury or that they were practically morons, who did not know when duress was being applied to them.

That the Trial Examiner completely disregarded and refused to consider the employees' testimony is conclusively shown by the fact that in his Intermediate Report the only mention made by him of this testimony—obviously the most important evidence in the case—is at X, 3848, where he says "the undersigned accorded the respondent and the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected at the prior hearing * * *," and then after devoting 40 printed pages to the recitation of other evidence, mostly circumstantial, and without once mentioning that the 1,200 employees testified to the contrary, the Trial Examiner at X, 3888, says: "On all the evidence the undersigned finds the respondent dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union * * *"! A more flagrant disregard of important direct evidence and flaunting of the Court's ruling can hardly be conceived, unless it be that of the Board itself to which we now turn.

The Board was more blunt in stating its disregard for the evidence which the Court had ruled was material. The Board adopts the Trial Examiner's intermediate report word for word (A. 618) save for a minor correction

(A, 620) and bluntly says that it "adheres to its opinion," that the employees' testimony has no materiality upon the issue of domination—"* * * we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the Act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case". (A, 619).

The Board lamely attempts to side step its open avowal that it deems said evidence immaterial by saying that it "carefully considered all such evidence" (A, 619). It seems, obvious, however, that no bona fide consideration was given by the Board to evidence which it avowedly treated as immaterial. The respondent gained nothing by the Court's remand of the case to the Board to "receive and consider" (XIII, 5) the excluded evidence. It was the same as though the Board had again refused to receive it at all. The Board's refusal to accept the spirit of the Court's decision made the remand a mere farce. As said in De Bardeleben v. National Labor Relations Board, (C. C. A. 5) 135 F. 2d 13, l. c. 14-15:

> "The finding of the board that the acts of the employees in forming their own association were not their voluntary acts but were the results of domination, interference and support by the company, in the face of the positive evidence of those who formed the organization that this was not so, and with no evidence to the contrary, is a mere fiat."

And in Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, (C. C. A. 5) 113 F. 2d 85, l. c. 91:

> "If human testimony can establish anything, it establishes that Humble did not dominate or interfere with the organization of either Federation."

Nor was this "conclusionary" evidence, as it is referred to by the Board. It is testimony as to facts. The witnesses were asked, not only, "did you join the DGWU of your own free will," but were asked questions such as these: "Did any officer, executive or anyone that you thought was representing the management talk to you about the meeting?" (of April 27th) (VIII, 2565): "Now, prior to that meeting, had anyone, any officer, executive, or anyone representing the management, suggested to you or suggested to anybody else in your presence that the employees form a union?" (VIII, 2566); "Did any official, executive, or representative of the management request you to sign the petition?" (of March 2nd) (p. 2578); "Did you gain the impression from any source, or did you understand that the Loyalty League had anything to do with the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union?" (p. 2582); "Did you ever hear anybody in the factory say that Ross Todd represents the employers about labor matters?" (p. 2593) etc., etc. The answers to all these questions were in the negative. Those and many other similar answers constituted testimony as to facts, not conclusions.

But we also submit that the answers that the employees "joined the DGWU of their own free will and without coercion on the part of the petitioner" is testimony as to a fact—i. e. the state of mind of the witnesses—and as to the fact that such state of mind was not created by duress of petitioner. And who would know that fact better than the employees concerned?

The materiality and well-nigh conclusive character of this testimony seems obvious. This is not a case where a few or several employees testify to direct acts of coercion by officials or high supervisory employees, and several other employees and the officials deny such acts—here there is not a single employee (even including the hostile and adverse employees called by the Board) who testified to any direct act of coercion or interference on the part of any official or supervisory employee of Respondent with respect to the employees joining or not joining the DGWU or any labor organization. On the contrary 100% of the employees concerned testified (or offered to testify) that there was no coercion.

At the first hearing the only witness who even came near to testifying to any coercion was the Board's supposedly "star witness," Elsa Graham Greenhaw (a hostile, former employee brought by the Board from Indiana, I, 353; II, 374-5, 378d), whose testimony was accepted by the Trial Examiner in his first intermediate report as overbalancing the testimony of all other employees and officials because she was "disinterested" and testified in a "straight-forward and unhesitating" manner (A, 519); but when the extremely evasive character of her testimony (I, 369-372; II, 373) was pointed out in Respondent's former briefs, and that the only coercion she was able to specify was alleged coercion in the 1936 general election! (II, 373), and a reprimand in 1936 by Mr. Keyes of some employees concerning their work! (II, 378g), the Board dropped Mrs. Greenhaw like a hot potato and she is not mentioned in the last 40-page decision except once (X, 3865), and that in a connection which shows no coercion. May Fike, the Board's other principal witness in the first hearing did not testify to any direct coercion as to labor affiliations.

In the second hearing, the Board put on six witnesses. Geneva Copenhaver admitted that there was no act or word of coercion by Respondent to cause her to join the DGWU ("* * * The company never intimidated me one way or the other, they never told me that if I didn't sign I would be fired; * * *"), (X, 3493, 3492), but she testified that she "felt" that if she did not join she might lose her job (X, 3498). Similarly, Mrs. Stevens, testified to no act or word of coercion (X, 3692). Both had previously signed affidavits that they joined the DGWU freely and voluntarily (X, 3489, 3689-90). Mrs. Weilert testified that there was no coercion at the time of the formation of the DGWU (X, 3581) and for about two years thereafter (X, 3601) but later (when the DGWU did not do what she wanted done, (X, 3559, 3567) she thought something was wrong. She refused to do repair work and quit (X, 3578). Neither Mrs. Dorsey, Mrs. Skeen, nor Mrs. Keyes, testified to any direct coercion on the part of Respondent (See pp. 105-111, Part Two, infra, for further discussion of the Board's witnesses).

The foregoing situation differentiates the case at bar from International Association of Machinists v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 72, NLRB v. Link-Belt Co., 311 U. S. 584, and H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 514, and from practically every other Labor Board case in the books based on coercion or interference, where usually, as in International Machinists case, a number of employees testify to direct acts of coercion or interference by high supervisory officials.

Here the unanimous testimony of the employees that there was no coercion is corroborated by the testimony of Respondent's officials, Mrs. Reed, Mrs. Reeves, Mr. Baty, Mr. Keyes, that the Respondent and its management did not interfere in any way with the employees in their union activities. (II, 405-6-7, 430-1, 480-1-2, 539-540; VII, 2074, 2094, 2117, 2149, 2157, 2160). It is further corroborated by the fact that in the entire period of several years, covered by the testimony (1934-1942) the Board did not find a single instance of any employee (out of 1,200) being discharged for union affiliation. It is further corroborated by the fact that for a period of five years (now nine), in this era of "independence" of employees, there has been no change in the choice of the employees of the DGWU as their bargaining representatives (XIII, 55). And, lastly, it is corroborated by the fact that none of the Board's witnesses testified to any direct acts of coercion by respondent.

Opposed to this direct, postive, 100% testimony of all persons concerned, is merely the conjecture, speculation, and inference of the Trial Examiner, based almost wholly on circumstantial evidence, most of which would possess little, if any, probative value, even if it were not opposed by such direct, positive, corroborated evidence.

In this situation we respectfully urge that the Trial Examiner and Board were not justified in disregarding the 100% testimony of the employees and "adhering to the opinion" that it was "immaterial," especially after the Circuit Court of Appeals had ruled that it was material and should be considered by the Board as material.

As said by the Court below in its prior opinion (123 F. 2d, l. c. 222):

> "The individuals who form an unincorporated association certainly should know what sort of an organization it is, how it happened to be formed, who influenced its formation, and who controls it."

The refusal of the Board to put this evidence on the scales constituted a denial of due process to Respondent.

As was said by the Second Circuit in NLRB v. A. Sartorius & Co., 140 F. 2d 203, l. c. 205:

> "* * * if an administrative agency ignores all the evidence given by one side in a controversy and with studied design gives credence to the testimony of the other side, the findings would be arbitrary and not in accord with the legal requirement."

And by the Fifth Circuit in NLRB v. Tex-O-Kan Flour Mills Co., 122 F. 2d 433, 438 (quoted by the 8th Circuit in American Smelting & Refining Co. v. NLRB, 126 F. 2d 680, 688):

"That the witness was or is an employee of the party on whose behalf he testifies, is not in itself a reason to discard his oath, appears from the cited case, and was extensively demonstrated in Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co. v. Martin, 283 U. S. 209."

In NLRB v. McGough Bakeries Corp., (C. C. A. 5) 153 F. 2d 420, the court says (l. c. 425):

"The account given by Bunch, King and Martin, all sworn by the Board as witnesses, of the formation of the Independent and of the contract with it, is consistent and uncontradicted and shows no unlawful domination of, or assistance to, Independent. This sworn testimony cannot be over-ridden by suspicion or by slight circumstances that may be given another color. See Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333, 341, 53 S. Ct. 391, 77 L. Ed. 819; Chesapeake and Ohio R. R. Co. v. Martin, 283 U. S. 209, 51 S. Ct. 453, 75 L. Ed. 983."

In NLRB v. Sheboygan Chair Co., (C. C. A. 7) 125 F. 2d 436, the court says (l. c. 439):

"The Board should not discard the positive credible testimony of witnesses in favor of an inference drawn from tenuous circumstances that at best could have supported only an anemic suspicion. Such an inference does not meet the test of substantial evidence" (Citing Consolidated Edison Co. case and other cases.)

In A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 7) 117 F. 2d 868, the court says (l. c. 878):

"While we recognize that the Board is not bound by the findings or conclusions of its Examiner, as is a court by its master or referee, and that its findings are conclusive if substantially supported, yet we think that where its conclusion rests on inferences, such can not prevail in face of direct evidence to the contrary."

In Keystone Steel & Wire Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 7) 155 F. 2d 553, the situation was similar to the case at bar in that a number of employees testified that there was no coercion and an offer was made that the 919 additional employees constituting the balance of the membership of the union would testify to the same effect. The Board refused to consider this testimony as having any probative value, as it refused to do in the case at bar. The court comments on this failure of the Board to accord any materiality to the employees' testimony saying (l. c. 560):

> "From this it seems clear to us that the only manner in which the Board considered the testimony of 1,137 witnesses out of the 1,371 employees was, as the Board said, as 'generally unreliable' testimony."

and the court refused to enforce the Board's order based on its finding that the employer dominated the employees.

In Cupples Co. Manufacturers v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 8) 106 F. 2d 100, the court says (l. c. 105):

> "the Board, like a jury, may not disregard the uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached and credible witnesses."

See, also, to the same effect Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co. v. Martin, 283 U. S. 209, l. c. 214-217; NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, Inc., (9 Cir.) 99 F. 2d 153, 177; NLRB v. Greider Machine Tool & Die Co., (6 Cir.) 142 F. 2d 163, 165; NLRB v. Thompson Products, Inc., (6 Cir.) 97 F. 2d 13, 15.

Respondent respectfully submits that the Board's refusal to treat as material the unanimous testimony of the employees concerned that they formed and joined the DGWU as their voluntary choice of a bargaining agency, was not only a flagrant abuse of its own power (Consolidated Edison Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 197, l. c. 226; Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 28; and other cases, supra), but was also a flagrant disregard of the Court's ruling, and that the Court below was amply justified in refusing to enforce the Board's Order so arrived at.

The Board's Argument.

The Board in its brief does not deny that it refused to accord any materiality or weight to this overwhelming direct testimony of 1,200 unimpeached witnesses, but openly admits that the Board refused to follow the court's mandate in this respect. At page 17 the brief says "the Board properly refused to give weight to this conclusionary testimony." It says (pp. 18 and 76) that the Board should not be required even to receive it; and at page 75 it says that "the Board's treatment of the testimony in question was entirely proper * * *."

In this respect counsel take the same position that the Board, itself, took in its order, "adhering to the opinion" that the testimony is "immaterial" to the issues (A. 619).

The Board thereby puts itself above and beyond the court and refuses to accord to the court the place which Congress provided the court should have in labor board cases and contrary to the ruling of this court in Ford Motor Co. v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 364 (l. c. 372-3-4-5) where it is said (p. 375) that the Board voluntarily did "what the court could have compelled."

The reasons given (pp. 75-82) for the Board's refusal to obey the letter and spirit of the court's remand are (1) that the organization, structure, and company support of the DGWU were such as to insure company domination; (2) that such testimony is "introspective"; (3) that it is "unreliable"; (4) that employees do not know whether or not any coercion is being applied to them; (5) that employees may not feel free to testify to coercion; and (6) that it should be excluded in the interests of administrative efficiency (pp. 17-18).

None of these reasons is valid. (1) the structure, organization and alleged company support of the DGWU here is not such as to insure company domination. The court below in its previous opinion pointed this out (123 F. 2d l. c. 222):

> "This was not a case where domination and support by an employer of an independent union was conceded or where the independent union was conclusively shown to be of a character which could not, in any event, act as the bargaining representative of its members."

Here there was no "prior" union or employer-employee plan in which the employer had participated, as existed in NLRB v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 308 U. S. 241, and similar cases. Here the nature of the structure, organization and alleged company support of the DGWU depends on employee testimony. The Board by its argument attempts to lift itself by its own boot straps—it first finds from the testimony of its own few employee witnesses that the structure, organization and support of the DGWU was such as to insure company domination, and then, having so found, it says that the testimony of the Respondent's 1,200 employee witnesses is rendered "immaterial" because of such finding. Obviously the testimony of the Respondent's 1,200 witnesses should have been received and considered prior to determining the nature of the structure, organization and alleged company support of the DGWU and, if it had been in good faith received and considered, it would have precluded any finding that the structure, organization or support of the DGWU was such as to insure company domination.

The Board, in ascertaining the nature of the structure, organization, etc., of the DGWU received and considered employee testimony just as introspective and conclusionary as the excluded testimony of the 1,200 witnesses offered by Respondent. The Board asked Mrs. Dorsey and Mrs. Skeens whether they regarded themselves as supervisory employees (IX, 3324, 3434) and asked whether the employees considered the instructors as supervisors (IX, 3325, 3434; X, 3481, 3673); and whether the members of the DGWU felt free to express themselves with instructors present (IX, 3318; X, 3878); and accepted Rose Todd's statement that she was "distressed" at having to use the word "union" (X, 3873). Surely the testimony of the 1,200 witnesses is just as much entitled to consideration as such testimony from the Board's witnesses, yet the Board upon the testimony of its witnesses found that the instructors "regarded themselves as supervisory and are so regarded by the operators" (X, 3852), and now makes no complaint of the reception or conclusionary character of such testimony.

(2) The testimony and offered testimony of the 1,200 witnesses was not wholly introspective but largely consisted of statements of fact as to how and why they formed the DGWU and as to statements of fact showing there was no coercion by Respondent. An employee knows whether an employer has told him that if he joins a union he will be "fired" and likewise he knows whether the employer has not so told him. If no such pressure has been applied, he can say as a fact that no such coercion occurred. (Note the type of questions asked p. 48, supra.)

When such testimony is multiplied by 1,200 it removes much if not all of the introspection or unreliability which might inhere in such testimony if given by only one or a few witnesses. The vote of an employee at a labor board election involves just as much introspection yet the Board accepts such vote as representing the free and voluntary choice of the employee. Should employee testimony under oath be accorded any less materiality or credence? What could be more introspective than the testimony of the Board's witness, Geneva Copenhaver, who testified (X, 3498) that "it was clear in my own mind that if I did not belong to the union, I wouldn't have a job there very long," or that of the Board's witness, May Stevens, who, when asked if the employes at the DGWU organizational meeting were not told that they "were to do as you pleased," answered: "Perhaps so, but we knew differently" (X, 3692).

The Board received and accepted and acted on that testimony notwithstanding its introspective nature. Apparently the Board is willing to receive and accept introspective, conclusionary testimony if it is favorable to the Board but deems that it should not be considered or even received if favorable to the employer.

Concerning the comments of this court in NLRB v. Link Belt Co., 311 U. S. 584, that it would be a rare case where the finders of fact "could probe the precise factors of motivation which underlay each employee's choice," we believe the case at bar may fairly constitute the exception that proves the rule, for here there was substantial opportunity to probe those factors, as the testimony of all the employees was offered on the question and furthermore the net result of their reasons was physically presented in the form of affidavits, an acceptable form of evidence in Labor Board hearings.

(3) As to "unreliability," we need say little. If only one or a few employees testified to no coercion there might be just ground to believe that the few might be mistaken or not know of coercion applied to the many other employees not testifying; but where the entire 1,200 testify to the same thing, the likelihood of mistake fades entirely away, considered from any reasonable juridical standpoint. Such evidence then not only becomes reliable but well-nigh conclusive; certainly not to be ignored, as was done here.

(4) It seems ridiculous to say that intelligent employees do not know when pressure is being applied to them to join or not to join a union. As the cour below said (123 F. 2d l. c. 222):

> "The individuals who form an unincorporated association, certainly should know what sort of an organization it is, how it happened to be formed, who influenced its formation, and who controls it."

(5) The contention that employees are not free to testify truthfully is likewise fallacious. If the employees had been coerced by Respondent to join the DGWU in 1937 against their will, they would have welcomed the opportunity given by the Labor Board hearings in 1939 and again in 1942, to say so. And certainly this reason even if it would be valid in a small organization of 6 or 8 employees would not apply to 1,200 employees. The cases cited by the Board in footnote 18, page 77, are not applicable—the employer here was not conducting a "pool" or "poll" of its employees—it was presenting testimony in a proceeding conducted by the Labor Board itself, under all the sanctions of oath and conditions designed to insure free testimony by employees.

Nor are the cases cited by the Board (footnote 19, p. 78) applicable here as those cases involve "prior" labor unions or plans in which the employer had such an integral part that it was deemed to carry over into the successor union. Here there was no prior union.

Nor is Western Cartridge Co. v. NLRB, 134 F. 2d 240, applicable to the case here for at least three reasons: In that case the board received the testimony of the witnesses "who participated in the organization of the Independent" as to their reasons for joining but refused to receive the testimony of several thousand employees as to their reasons for joining after its formation (l. c. 245). Here, on the contrary, the Trial Examiner refused to receive the testimony offered of the employees who participated in the formation of the DGWU. Secondly, there is nothing in the Western Cartridge case to indicate a pre-judgment on the part of the Trial Examiner or Board against the employee testimony, as here; and thirdly, the factual situation in the Western Cartridge case was wholly different. There the court found that the company "engaged in varied coercive measures to keep the employees from joining the A. F. of L." (l. c. 243), and recites a number of such instances. Here the Respondent engaged in no coercive measures to make the employees join or not join any union, but the employees freely met and formed their own union in such spontaneous unanimity as to leave no doubt that their action was voluntary and not coerced. The cases cited by the Board in footnote 20, page 80, are distinguishable because they involve prior company-dominated unions or because they disclosed coercive activities by the employer, or both (See also discussion in Part Two, infra, of "prior union" under B-3, 1.

At page 81, the Board says that it called several of the employees listed in Respondent's offer of proof "who testified that employees were coerced." None of such witnesses testified to any direct acts of coercion by Respondent (See discussion of the testimony of the Board's witnesses, pp. 105-111, infra; surely that testimony falls far short of any direct coercion). Nowhere in the record is there any testimony of any economic pressure whatever by the management against any employee to form or join the DGWU. This distinguishes the case at bar from practically all cases where the Board's orders based on "domination" have been upheld.

The Board's argument (p. 81) that if any employee testimony is to be received, the "total number" of employees would be required, is answered by the fact, first, that the testimony of the total number was offered and also their affidavits were introduced (VI, 1677-1749), and, secondly, it was conceded by counsel for the Board and ILGWU that the testimony given by Respondent's employee witnesses was a fair sample of what all the rest would say (IX, 3252-3). That the total number of employees were not called here was due to the Trial Examiner's ruling that further testimony would be cumulative. While that is a proper method of controlling the extent of testimony, it is not a proper method if the tribunal may then say that the proof has failed because further such testimony was not given!

The Board's argument (p. 82) that the evidence if admitted would not change the result is not valid. The excluded testimony, instead of being "of the slightest" probative value, was well-nigh conclusive, when considered by a "reasonable," unbiased mind.

(6) Lastly, the Board, "in the interest of administrative efficiency," has no right to exclude evidence of employees as to whether the union they have selected was freely selected. The very purpose of holding a Labor Board hearing is to establish that fact. Of course, it is not necessary to hear the entire 1,200 from the stand if the Board does not wish to do so. It may hear sufficient to obtain a fair picture and consider that the others would testify to the same effect, as was conceded at the second hearing here (X, 3252-3).

We respectfully submit that the Board has not advanced any valid justification for the Board's repeated refusal to follow the court's mandate, to consider, in good faith, the testimony of Respondent's 1,200 employee witnesses.

(2) Evidence of conspiracy and violence by ILGWU.

In NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Co., Supra, this Court in passing upon the materiality of evidence of violence and lawlessness engaged in by the petitioning union held (headnote 1) that—

> "the dynamiting and other acts of violence might have explained the preference expressed by some employees for the latter union, which preference had been wholly disbelieved by the Board, and, on the whole case, it would seem that the Board ought to have considered the dynamiting, along with the other evidence, before reaching any final conclusion in the case."

And the Court also held (l. c. 20) that such evidence would go to the

> "fairness of giving absolute finality to the Board's findings of fact" and also (l. c. 24) would bear on the employees' "good faith in testifying to the reasons for preferring an association of their own to Local B-9."

The excluded evidence here, with reference to the conspiracy, unlawful activities, and threats of the complaining union, ILGWU, against the Donnelly company and its employees, comes within the same general category as that ruled upon by this Court in the Indiana and Michigan case, supra.

The trial examiner and the Board refused to receive evidence and rejected offers of proof to show that at all of the times mentioned in the complaint the ILGWU was engaging in unlawful acts and threats of violence and fraud, and to show the illegal methods practiced by the ILGWU in its activities to force petitioner to compel its employees to join the ILGWU against their will. Said acts which petitioner desired to prove are briefly described in Assignment of Error No. 30 (A, 64, 67), which we respectfully ask the court to read.

The excluded evidence would have shown that the ILGWU was threatening to subject the Donnelly employees to physical violence and to the humiliation of having their clothing stripped from them in the public streets, as the ILGWU had been doing in its other strikes (A. 488-491; IV, 1216, 1228, 1273, 1275, 1302, 1305; V, 1412, et seq., 1477, 1483, 1511, 1527, 1546; XII, 4195) as well as endangering their jobs and right to go to and from their work in peace and security. These were vital rights—rights which respondent's employees might be expected to protect and preserve to themselves by every lawful means, without any pushing or "coercion" by respondent. This evidence, therefore, had a direct bearing on the principal issue here of whether there was "domination" by respondent or whether the employes acted of their own volition (Indiana and Michigan case, supra).

The Board refused to receive such testimony or to let respondent go into any of the matters relating to such conspiracy (A. 509) which were pleaded as a defense in Part B of respondent's answer (A. 387-394), but struck that part of respondent's answer (A. 508) and rejected respondent's offer of proof (III, 742d; VIII, 2562) on Part B of its answer (See Assignment of Error No. 30, A. 64-67).

The respondent and intervener DGWU also repeatedly offered to prove by witnesses on the stand that the ILGWU and its strikers at nearby garment plants had, immediately preceding the formation of the DGWU, committed many acts of violence against the employees of those garment factories and had threatened that the Donnelly employees "would be next" and would be subjected to the same or worse violence (I, 144; IV, 1221, 1225, 1228), and that these threats and activities of the ILGWU were communicated to the Donnelly employees and created great unrest among them and motivated and caused them to take steps for their own protection (A, 488-9), one of which was the formation of the DGWU.

> "Q. Tell me what they said, and who it was?
> A. As this old lady got up and started in the building somebody said, 'Isn't that awful, the way they are treating her?' And Miss Tobin said, 'That's just a sample of what we are going to do down at Donnelly's.'
> Q. (By Mr. Patten) Did you report that at the plant?
> A. I talked it over with the employees.
> * * * * * * *
> Trial Examiner Batten: * * * I am not going to receive that type of testimony on that question" (II. 718z, 718bb).

The main issue in this case is whether the respondent coerced its employees into forming the DGWU or whether the employees formed and joined it voluntarily because of some other reason. The materiality of this and other similar testimony and offered testimony is, therefore, apparent—if they formed and joined the DGWU voluntarily by reason of a desire to protect themselves against the threatened violence and other activities of the ILGWU, then obviously they did not form and join it because of respondent's coercion.

This evidence, therefore, tended to disprove the principal charge in the complaint. It also tended to corroborate the offered testimony of the employees that the respondent did not dominate or coerce them into forming or joining the DGWU but that they formed and joined the DGWU of their own free will and accord, as it shows a logical reason for such action.

The refusal to receive and consider this evidence was therefore highly prejudicial to respondent.

In NLRB v. Asheville Hosiery Co., (C. C. A. 4) 103 F. 2d 288, the Court said (l. c. 291-292):

> "Evidence of the most convincing kind shows that the misrepresentations and threats above referred to had stirred up violent resentment on the part of a majority of the workers against those who favored the Union. * * *
>
> "There is no substantial ground for the rejection of the overwhelming evidence that the hostile attitude of the great majority of the workers toward the Union proceeded from their sincere and spontaneous dislike of outside interference; and it is not enough to say that the management shared this feeling and manifested it in the statements of its supervisory officials."

This evidence was not excluded by the Trial Examiner merely on the ground that it was cumulative—the Trial Examiner repeatedly refused to consider at all that type of evidence. The fact that in isolated instances an occasional answer or statement of a witness to this effect was made and appears in the record, does not cure the error. The Trial Examiner refused to consider this evidence at all, and it was not considered either by the Trial Examiner or the Board.

The attitude of the Trial Examiner in refusing to consider this evidence is shown in Respondent's exceptions before the National Labor Relations Board Nos. 52, 58, 59, 87, 154, 155, 156, 161, 165, 166, 167, 178, 179, 184, 219, 220, 241, 259, 266, 300, 301 (A, 86, 93, 94-5, 116-7, 185-6-7-8, 189, 193-4, 196-7-8-9-200, 207-8-9, 215-16-17, 249, 251-2, 255, 257, 276-7, 295-6, 308, 336, 301; X, 3787-3791).

This evidence, had it been admitted and considered, would have been conclusive (to an unbiased mind) that Respondent did not coerce or interfere with its employes in their free choice of a union, but that their choice of the DGWU was motivated and impelled by reason of the unlawful activities and threats of the ILGWU, and their desire not to be represented by such a union.

The court below was "not in error" in ruling that this evidence should have been received by the Board, and that Respondent was denied a fair trial by reason of the Board's refusal to receive and consider it.

The Board's Argument.

The Board argues (pp. 96-104) that the Board was justified in refusing to receive or consider the foregoing offered testimony as to the violence perpetrated by the ILGWU against employees of other garment plants and threats to inflict the same or worse upon Donnelly employees and other unlawful acts of the ILGWU because, it claims, the court below in its first decision ruled that the Board need not receive such testimony. We do not believe the court's opinion is susceptible of that construction. The court did not really discuss or specify what evidence was or was not admissible except the "employee testimony." As to the alleged conspiracy, it merely said 123 F. 2d l. c. 225:

> "We are of the opinion that the Trial Examiner did not err in confining the issues to those which were tendered by the complaint filed by the Board. We are satisfied that the Board was not required to try the International for alleged conspiracy nor to try the charge that the Board had conspired or colluded with the International."

It did not say that acts of violence by the ILGWU against other garment workers or threats to use similar violence against the Donnelly employees was not to be received. It is reasonable to believe that the most the court meant was that the Board did not have to dismiss the complaint, by reason of the International's bad motives in filing the charge, and that it did not intend to rule that evidence bearing on the question of the "free action" of the Donnelly employees in forming a union should be excluded even though it might relate to the ILGWU or its activities.

That the court contemplated that the Board should receive other rejected evidence besides the so-called "employee evidence," is shown by the court's comments (p. 224) that a "Trial Examiner should receive all evidence offered by any party in interest except such as is palpably incompetent * * *" and that "we say this in the hope of preventing a repetition of what occurred in the case now before us," and by the court's final language (p. 225) that the Board should "accord to the petitioners (Respondents here) an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner." Had the court been referring only to the rejected "employee testimony" it would undoubtedly have specified "the rejected employee testimony" instead of saying generally "all competent and material evidence." The court did not specifically rule one way or the other upon several items of evidence which Respondent claimed should have been received. The Board says (p. 94): "there still remain numerous rulings of the examiner on the admissibility of evidence urged by the company as prejudicial error in the court below which have not been expressly passed upon by the court below in either its first or second opinion." We think that the rejected evidence as to violence, threats, etc., comes within this category and that the court in its first opinion did not attempt to limit or delimit with nicety the range of evidence to be received at the second hearing, but intended that the Board should receive all competent and material evidence offered.

This view is substantiated by the language of the court itself in its last opinion in which it indicates that it did not regard its first opinion as ruling that testimony as to the ILGWU conspiracy, violence, threats, etc., was not to be received but merely that the Board could, but was not compelled, to inquire into whether it should drop the complaint because "it was being taken advantage of to further unlawful or unworthy activities of the complaining union" (XIII, 45). But, if it should go ahead with the hearing, there was no intimation by the court that it should not receive all competent and material evidence. Thus there is "no change of position" by the court as the Board assumes (p. 99) and the proffered evidence is well within the terms of the remand. Its relevancy is patent as it bears directly on the most important issue in the case—whether the employees formed the DGWU of their own volition, motivated by the acts and threats of the ILGWU against them, or whether it was because of coercion by Respondent.

As the court says (XIII, 46), "the charges of misconduct made by the company and the plant union against the International are not without substance is shown by the record." (See holdings of federal courts in Donnelly Garment Co. v. ILGWU et al., referred to in the Statement of Facts, supra.)

As shown above, the Trial Examiner refused to accept testimony as to threats of dire consequences to be visited by the ILGWU upon the Donnelly employees. Such evidence was, therefore, not before the Board and not considered by the Board or Trial Examiner. The same is virtually true as to the whole ILGWU conspiracy and misconduct. Had this evidence been received and fairly considered, in good faith, it might well have changed the Board's decision, as it would have thrown light on the good faith of the employees' testimony that they were not coerced but formed the DGWU of their own volition for the reasons stated (Indiana and Michigan case, supra). It might also have eliminated the Board's conclusion that their testimony was "unreliable."

This evidence was far from being a "collateral" matter as the Board argues (pp. 103-4). It was the very foundation of the employees' action, according to their unanimous testimony.

We respectfully submit that the Board has presented no adequate reason for the rejection of this important and material testimony or for upsetting the decision of the court below.

(3) Failure to receive evidence as to events in 1934-35.

The Board over respondent's objections (III, 1110 a, b, c), received in evidence at the first hearing, hundreds of pages of testimony given in an invalid NRA proceeding back in 1934-35 (prior to the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act). Respondent contends, and the Court below ruled (XIII, 48), that having admitted the Board's and ILGWU's evidence as to the 1934-35 activities, the Board should not have excluded respondent's countervailing evidence and cross examination relating to the same period and events (VIII, 2784-2808 inclusive, 2823-25, 2887-8, 2896; X, 3757; A, 278-281, 285-286). The Board based its finding (erroneous, we claim) of respondent's "hostility to unions" on such evidence (X, 3859-63, 3885-6). If the so-called "background" was material, certainly respondent was entitled to show all the surrounding circumstances. At the last hearing, counsel for the Board interrogated respondent's employee witnesses concerning said so-called background and particularly with reference to the Loyalty League. Respondent then sought to inquire into the activities of the ILGWU at said times (VIII, 2784). Counsel for the Board and the ILGWU objected and the Trial Examiner ruled that respondent would not be permitted to go back of November, 1936, with regard to such evidence. After extended argument (VIII, 2784-2808) Trial Examiner Batten stated (III, 2808):

> "I think we are ready to proceed and I think the offers of proof contemplate the period in or about March 18, 1937, and as to any strike or matters of that kind which occurred during that period, and I think it is reasonable to go back to—I think the offers contemplated at least a period, I would say, from November on, and anything prior to that I will now rule are not covered by the offers of proof and, therefore, should not be presented at this time in line with my ruling directing the order of proof."

In other words, the Board was given the right to go back to 1934 and 1935 but respondent was denied that right.

Nor was this a mere ruling on "order of proof," as the trial examiner never permitted respondent to present such evidence (VIII, 2562; IX, 3257, 3265; X, 3783; III, 742b; A, 64-67; 508-509).

Besides, the offers of proof did cover the offered testimony as there was no time limitation in them.

A few minutes after the ruling at VIII, 2808, towit at pages 2823-25 (Assignment of Error No. 244, A, 279-281), the trial examiner permitted the Board to examine the witness about incidents that occurred in 1935. Even counsel for the Board evidently felt the trial examiner's failure to sustain respondent's and interveners' objections was contrary to his ruling limiting the evidence to November, 1936 (Miss Weyand's statement, VIII, 2825). But the trial examiner persisted in letting the Board go into these matters prior to November, 1936, and the Board did continue through pages 2825-2831. At VIII, 2887-89, similar testimony by the Board was permitted over objection that it went back prior to November, 1936 (Assignment of Error No. 248, A, 285). Similar ruling was made at page VIII, 2896, again at IX, 3336-7, and again at X, 3757.

Counsel for the Board in their brief (p. 98) say that the six months' period (i. e. to November, 1936) back of which no testimony should be received, was fixed "at the suggestion of counsel for the Company (VIII, 2788, 2805-2809)." However, the Court will observe from those references that the suggestion was made only in the event it was observed on both sides, not that respondent should be so limited and the Board be permitted to go farther back (as the Board permitted the Board to do, while restricting respondent to the six months' period). After much argument, the Trial Examiner conceded that this was the extent of Mr. Ingraham's suggestion, saying (VIII, 2808):

> "Trial Examiner Batten: Well, it is very obvious I was mistaken, in your remarks, Mr. Ingraham."

(But the Trial Examiner still continued to permit the Board to go back of six months and continued to refuse to permit respondent to do so.)

The relevance and materiality of respondent's countervailing evidence and cross examination as to these matters, and the unfairness of excluding it, seem too obvious to require further discussion, especially in view of the fact that the Trial Examiner and Board attached great importance to the Board's 1934-1935 testimony and used such testimony as a basis for many adverse findings against Respondent.

Respondent made an additional offer of proof (Board's Ex. I-VVVVV, X, 3792) at the second hearing, which the Trial Examiner also rejected (X, 3783).

The Court below was "not in error" in ruling that this offered evidence should have been received and considered.

The Board's Argument.

At pages 90-91 the Board argues or rather assumes that this evidence was properly excluded because not within the terms of the remand. Such position is wholly fallacious. The court did not in its remand limit the testimony to be taken strictly to the offers of proof. It said (123 F. 2d l. c. 225) that the Board should "accord to the petitioners (respondents) an opportunity to introduce all of the competent, and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner." If this testimony was rejected at the first hearing, it was certainly within the letter of the remand. It was so rejected.

The Trial Examiner at the first hearing overruled Respondent's objections to the introduction of the old NRA record (III, 1110a-1110c), thereby forcing Respondent to introduce portions of the testimony from that record; but instead of receiving such testimony outright, the Trial Examiner qualified his ruling so as to deprive Respondent of any beneft from the evidence. In admitting such evidence, the Trial Examiner ruled (A, 509):

"Acceptance of the testimony is not intended to enlarge the issues as defined by the pleadings or to reverse rulings heretofore made with respect to the introduction of evidence upon certain subjects."

The Board in its first decision states (A, 560):

"On Part B of the answer the respondent submitted certain parts of the transcripts of testimony taken in an NRA hearing, in which it was also the respondent and the ILGWU the charging union, and in the United States District Court injunction suit between the respondent and the ILGWU. The Trial Examiner refused the proffered evidence, granted the motion of the ILGWU to strike, * * * The Board has reviewed these rulings of the Trial Examiner and they are hereby affirmed."

Clearly, therefore, under the foregoing and the "qualified acceptance" of the NRA testimony offered by Respondent, it was rejected at the first hearing and comes strictly within the language of the court's remand quoted above.

The Respondent and intervener sought to have the Trial Examiner clarify his ruling qualifying the reception of said NRA evidence (A, 463-4) which he refused to do (A, 467). That this evidence was clearly excluded and not considered is indubitably shown by the Board's further statement in the first decision (A, 561 and footnote 12) with reference to such ruling:

"After the close of the hearing the respondent and the DGWU filed motions requesting the Trial Examiner to clarify his ruling, alleging that it was unfair, prejudicial, and denied them due process of law. The Trial Examiner denied these motions. We have examined the evidence contained in these partial transcripts in the light of the Trial Examiner's other rulings on the admission and exclusion of evidence and find no prejudicial error in his denial of these motions. His denial of said motions is hereby affirmed."

"12. It is manifest that the Trial Examiner's ruling excludes any evidence in these partial transcripts relating, inter alia, (1) to contracts between the ILGWU and other garment manufacturers, (2) to the claim of the respondent that it pays higher wages and maintains better working conditions than do other garment manufacturers, (3) to strikes and violence allegedly fomented by the ILGWU at other garment factories, (4) to the alleged conspiracy of the ILGWU against the respondent, (5) to testimony of the respondent's employees that they were not interfered with, restrained, or coerced by the respondent in their choice of the DGWU or their rejection of the ILGWU, and that the DGWU was formed by the employees because of the strikes and violence occurring at other garment factories which the ILGWU was attempting to organize."

From the above enumeration of the 5 classifications of evidence excluded from consideration in the NRA testimony, it will clearly be seen that the Trial Examiner and Board rejected and refused to consider virtually all of the offered testimony beneficial to respondent. The Board can with little grace now argue that such evidence was not rejected and hence not within the terms of the court's remand. The net result was that the Trial Examiner and Board considered and accepted as true all the old NRA evidence deemed favorable to the Board and at the same time ignored all the countervailing evidence therein favorable to respondent. That is lack of due process to the Nth degree and is characteristic of the Trial Examiner's attitude throughout the entire case.

We respectfully submit that the Board has totally failed to show that this offered evidence was outside the remand, or to give any valid reason for refusing to receive this evidence or why the decision of the court below with reference thereto was not correct.

Board's "Misuse" of 1934-1935 Evidence.

Not only was respondent denied a fair trial by the Board's rejection (by its "qualified" reception) of respondent's testimony from the old NRA hearing, as pointed out above, but the Board also denied respondent a fair trial by its misuse of the old NRA testimony, by basing findings thereon, although the alleged acts, if they occurred, occurred prior to the passage of the act.

The trial examiner in the first hearing announced that he would permit one witness for a half hour of "background" testimony (I, 7). He ended up with admitting (over respondent's objection, III, 1110a-1110c) whole reams of testimony from the old NRA hearing. The following references, given in the Board's brief, in support of the Board's findings, are all either references to the old NRA testimony, or to testimony concerning matters prior to the passage of the National Labor Relations Act:

p. 25—III, 1058; IV, 1120i, 1120u, 1120v, 1120z-1120bb, 1120dd-1120ee, 1120jj-1120mm; III, 1059-1061, 1092-1093, 1109.

p. 26—III, 1059; IV, 1120x-1120y.

p. 27—III, 1059, 1092-1094; IV, 1120x-1120y, 1120mm; III, 1092-1093.

p. 34—III, 1033-1034, 1102, 1104, 1058, 1105-1106, 1113, 1120g-1120h, 1107-1108, 1034, 1103-1104, 1106-1107, 1091, 1096-1097, 1033, 1036-1037, 1043, 1047, 1052, 1098; IV, 1120-1120b, 1120mm-1120rr, 1120vv, 1140-1141, 1153, 1156-1157; III, 1099; IV, 1120oo-1120rr, 1152-1156b.

p. 35—III, 1035-1036, 1044-1046, 1052-1055, 1067-1068, 1073-1074, 1076, 1079-1087, 1141, 1153-1154; IV, 1329; III, 1088-1089, 1068; IV, 1331; III, 1100-1101, 1101-1102, 1047-1048, 1063, 1069, 1090; IV, 1150-1151, 1323, 1325-1326, 1331; III, 1070; IV, 1331.

p. 36—III, 1036-1037, 1046-1051, 1098; IV, 1153; III, 1046-1049, 1037-1040, 1042-1044, 1051; IV, 1316-1317; III, 1032-1110a; IV, 1318; III, 1062-1066, 1073-1077; IV, 1120uu-1120vv.

p. 37—IV, 1126v-1129, 1130d-1130e, 1132-1136; 1156b-1157; 1323-1327; 1332-1334; III, 1044-1046, 1047-1048, 1080-1081, 1141-1142, 1078; IV, 1125.

p. 38—III, 1078, 1078-1079, 1071.

p. 39—III, 1091, 1097, 1108, 1113, 1117, 1011.

From that evidence the Board finds, among other things, that respondent had discriminated against certain employees because of their alleged affiliations with the ILGWU (Board's brief, pp. 9-10), and thereon bases its finding of respondent's "hostility" to unions and on that inference bases many other findings.

From such testimony it also makes findings that instructors and other employes were (in 1937) supervisory employes (X, 3854), and other adverse findings.

The board thus goes far beyond the legitimate use of "background" testimony (admissible for the light which it may throw on subsequent acts, not as substantive evidence of guilt). First; it amounts to conviction of respondent for alleged acts which, if true (which we deny), were not unlawful at the time, and takes away from respondent the presumption that, after acts are declared unlawful, the respondent would obey the law.

The second unfairness consists in the way the Board admitted this evidence. The Amended Complaint herein contained charges (A, 423) that respondent had discharged some 18 employees (later reduced to 15) involved in the old NRA charges (IV, 1319). The Board dismissed the charges herein as to those 18 employees (II, 388; A, 506, 512), presumably because not deemed relevant or material to the issues here. But after so dismissing and striking out these allegations in the complaint the trial examiner proceeds to determine the issue of union discrimination under the old NRA testimony adversely to respondent, even though the trial examiner, had also struck the testimony concerning the discharge of all those employees except three (II, 397), and later dismissed the charge as to those three (A, 512).

The third unfairness consists in the fact that the trial examiner here, as on all other matters, assumes as true every statement adverse to respondent in the old NRA testimony, and completely ignores the testimony favorable to respondent. A brief review of the circumstances surrounding the layoff of said 15 employees will demonstrate that the Board has ignored respondent's evidence. The NRA testimony clearly shows:

(1) That the 15 employees were laid off along with some 300 other employees, due to business depression (IV, 1158).

(2) That at the time of such layoff of the 15 girls respondent did not know that any of them belonged to the union (IV, 1159) and all except one of them did not then belong.

(3) That before any complaint was made to respondent by the union or by the N. R. A. Labor Board concerning the layoff of those girls, respondent had already reemployed eight of such "union" girls along with the reemployment of approximately 150 of the 300 girls laid off (IV, 1159).

(4) The employees transferred to the branch plant were not known to be union girls and were only a small part of the total employees at the branch factory (IV, 1120vv). The branch plant was a desirable place to work (IV, 1121).

A fair consideration of this evidence compels the conclusion that there was no discrimination against these employees.

Lastly, and highly significant in this connection, is the fact that although petitioner has been in business for 25 years, employing from 1,200 to 1,300 employees during the last several years, with the large turnover incident thereto, the Board was not able in this trial to establish a single instance during all those years of the discharge of an employee because of union affiliations. That fact speaks volumes. It renders baseless the findings of petitioner's "hostility" to unions (made by the Board on the old NRA testimony), and renders baseless the many other findings based on the finding of "hostility."

(4) Failure to receive evidence of provisions of ILGWU contracts.

The issue here is not merely the general, abstract question of whether in an unfair labor practice proceeding the contracts of the complaining union with other employers are admissible, as petitioner seems to present it. The relevance of the evidence is based, first, upon the fact that the Board and ILGWU devoted much time and evidence in an effort to show that the contracts between respondent and the DGWU were "sham" contracts (I, 160d, 160g, 161-2, 205-6), in support of their contention that the DGWU was dominated by respondent. They pointed to the provision in the DGWU contract that members of the bargaining committee must have been employed for a year by the respondent (I, 160d, 160g), as showing company domination. To rebut this and show that the provision was a proper and usual one in union contracts and hence no proof of domination, respondent offered to prove that the ILGWU contracts contained similar provisions (VI, 1656, 1661-2, 1669). Such evidence was clearly competent for that purpose and its materiality is shown by the Board's adverse comment based on the very contention which this rejected testimony would have refuted (X, 3879; Board's brief, p. 60).

In its prior decision the Board held that the insertion of that clause in the contract was "indicative of the Respondent's domination" (A, 603).

The contracts were also offered and were admissible for the purpose of showing that the wages and working conditions which the ILGWU was obtaining for its union members were not so favorable as those existing at the Donnelly plant, to refute the Board's and ILGWU's contention that the DGWU contract was not a good contract for the employes.

The Court was "not in error" in ruling such contracts admissible for the purposes offered.

The Board's Argument.

The Board's arguments (pp. 92-96) with reference to the Trial Examiner's refusal to receive in evidence the ILGWU contracts, are without merit. Counsel say, first, that they were not within the terms of the remand—but the only ground advanced in support thereof is that the Circuit Court of Appeals did not expressly mention them. We think a fair construction of the opinion, therefore, is that they were within the terms of the remand particularly as the case was remanded to receive "all competent and material" evidence which had been refused by the Trial Examiner, accompanied by an admonition that ordinarily a Trial Examiner should receive all evidence offered unless palpably incompetent." The contracts were clearly relevant and admissible to off-set the Board's and ILGWU's contentions as pointed out above.

The Board's argument (p. 95) that the contracts are not admissible because the Board made no finding that the DGWU contract was a "sham" contract, is no answer. The Board and the ILGWU were so contending at the trial. A defendant litigant is not precluded from introducing competent evidence to rebut the opposition's evidence merely because the tribunal may not make a finding on the other side's testimony; if so no defense evidence would ever be admissible. Besides, as stated above, the Board in its first decision had found that a certain clause in the DGWU contract was "indicative of Respondent's domination" (A, 603). At the second hearing, Respondent was therefore entitled to rebut the evidence on which that finding had been based, the Board having refused to let Respondent rebut it at the first hearing.

The case of the Bethlehem Steel Co. v. NLRB, (120 F. 2d 641, 651) is not to the contrary. In that case the purpose in introducing the contracts was to make a general showing "regarding the dates, scope, duration and terms of the agreements * * *" (l. c. 651). The court held the contracts irrelevant for such purpose. The purpose here was not general but to rebut specific contentions made by the Board and ILGWU in the trial.

The Board has presented no logical reason militating against the relevance of these contracts for the purpose for which they were offered.

(5) Refusal to receive evidence that Instructors, Thread Girls and other employees of respondent, held by the Board to be Supervisory Employees, were not so considered in trade unions generally, including the ILGWU itself, but were eligible to union membership.

One of the chief bases of the Board's decision against respondent is that the employees known as Instructors, Thread Girls, Head Pattern Maker (Mrs. Strickland) Head Cutter (Mr. Scoles), Examiners, and certain other employees, participated in the formation of the DGWU and were members of it and that their participation therein rendered that Union a dominated union, on the ground that such employees were "representatives of the management" (X, 3875-3878). To refute this finding or inference by the Board, the respondent sought to show by Wave Tobin, local manager of the ILGWU (X, 3788) and by the records of the ILGWU (X, 3790) and by Erwin Feldman, Counsel for many garment companies (X, 3791-2), that employees holding such or similar positions in garment companies, were regarded in trade unions generally, including the ILGWU, as not being Supervisory Employees but as being eligible to membership and participation in such unions. The relevance of this evidence for such purpose is apparent. In International Assoc. of Machinists v. National Labor Relations Board, 311 U. S. 72 (l. c. 80), this Court held that the test as to domination by alleged Supervisory employees was whether the employees generally "would have just cause to believe" that such alleged supervisory employees "were acting for and on behalf of the management." If employees in the garment industry generally do not regard such employees as supervisory employees and do regard them as eligible to join and participate in unions, those facts would have a bearing on the true status of such employees in the case at bar. It would also throw light on the credibility and effect to be given to the testimony of the employees and of respondent's officers as to the status of such alleged supervisory employees (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, I, c. 24-27).

In fact, the Board itself has used this very type of evidence for this very purpose: In Reid, Murdock & Company, 56 NLRB No. 57, The Board said: "The Union has included keymen of similar work status in its bargaining contracts with the company's competitors." (And the Board in that case found such "keymen" not supervisors but "ordinary production and maintenance employees.")

Under the Board's own decisions in other cases, the instructors, thread girls, Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton, head pattern maker, Mrs. Strickland, Mrs. Gray, the inspectors, and similar employees, were not supervisory employees but were eligible to membership in the DGWU and their membership and participation therein does not constitute domination, coercion or interference by the management:

Ranco, Inc., 57 NLRB No. 82, decided July 20, 1944, was an unfair labor practice case, similar to the case at bar. The question was whether "group leaders" and "set up men" were supervisory employees. The "group leaders" were very much like the instructors in the case at bar—they instructed employees, gave them work, etc. The Board said:

> "The basic question to be determined in order to resolve the issues concerning interference, restraint, and coercion on the part of the respondent and domination of the Independent by the respondent is the alleged supervisory status of two classes of employees, namely, group leaders and set-up men. * * *
>
> "Group leaders give work to employees in the production or inspection line, instruct employees in their duties, ascertain whether they are supplied with work, obtain supplies and equipment for employees, and at times engage in production work alongside ordinary employees.

"The record clearly establishes that neither group leaders nor set-up men have power to hire, demote, or discharge employees, to grant raises or leaves of absence, or to recommend such action. Their authority in this regard is limited to reporting to their superiors; either foremen or assistant foremen, the inefficiency of employees within their groups. * * * Although some employees testified that they regard set-up men and group leaders as their 'bosses,' the evidence establishes, in our opinion, that group leaders and set-up men perform no supervisory functions, being merely highly skilled employees, and are not regarded as supervisors by the management, by the other employees, or by themselves. Set-up men and group leaders were eligible to membership in both the Independent and the Union; several joined either one or the other organization. At the hearing, Lewis Strickland, the Union's International Representative, admitted that group leaders and job-setters were members of the Union and stated that their continued eligibility to membership was 'a matter for me to determine later on.' In view of all the evidence, we find that group leaders and set-up men were not supervisory employees. * * * We conclude that the respondent is not liable for their activities and statements."

In Industrial Rayon Corporation, 56 NRLB No. 104, decided May 15, 1944, the Board held that section inspectors and the head inspector in the cone packing department were not supervisory employees, saying:

"While they are responsible for the quality of the work produced, they do not supervise production employees in the sense that they have the power to hire, discharge, lay-off, discipline or otherwise effect changes in their status. Rejection by them of the work of the production employees does not have any direct or significant effect upon the earnings of these employees; they have no voice in determining or shaping the labor policy of the company. It is clear, therefore, that in the area of labor relations and policy, these employees do not constitute management in the eyes of the rank and file as do truly supervisory employees."

(And to the same effect, see: Dortch Stove Works, Inc., 58 NLRB No. 82; Reid, Murdock & Co., 56 NLRB No. 57; Yale & Towne Mfg. Co., 56 NLRB No. 193; Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., 53 NLRB No. 170; Castle & Cooke Terminals Ltd., 17 L. R. R. 859 (65 NLRB No. 175); Godchaux Sugars Inc., 44 NLRB No. 981; Western Union Tel. Co., 38 NLRB No. 1236; Berkowitz Envelope Co., 38 NLRB No. 914.

Although respondent contends that the "Instructors," "Thread Girls," etc., were in no sense supervisory employees and hence properly participated in the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union under the foregoing decisions of the Board, now the Board has gone further and held that the same union may have affiliated locals of supervisors and of production workers. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. (United Mine Workers case), 17 L. R. R. 971, decided March 7, 1946 (66 NLRB No. 51).

The Court below was "not in error" in ruling that such offered evidence should have been received, and that respondent was denied a fair trial by reason of its exclusion.

The Board's Argument.

The Board argues at page 87 that such evidence offered by Respondent was not admissible, first, because not offered at the first Labor Board hearing and hence not included in the court's remand.

However, at the second hearing, Respondent offered this testimony before testimony was offered by the Board at that hearing (VII, 2508, 2520; VIII, 2522-2540). The Trial Examiner refused to receive it (VIII, 2540-2564) and withheld action on Respondent's offer of proof thereon (VIII, 2563). Then when the Board began putting on its testimony at the second hearing, the Board itself went into this very question. One of its main lines of questions was whether the Instructors were regarded as supervisors (IX, 3324-5, 3434, 3318; X, 3481, 3878), and, based on the three or four affirmative answers, it makes the finding (X, 3852) that "they regard themselves as supervisors and are so regarded by the operators." Thereupon it became academic whether the Respondent had offered this testimony at the first hearing—after letting the Board go into the matter, the Respondent was entitled to do so also. But the Trial Examiner still refused to let Respondent do so and rejected (X, 3782-3) its offers of proof (X, 3787-3792). This was palpably erroneous, especially in view of the adverse finding since made.

However, such evidence was within the remand of the court. The court in remanding the case did not attempt to set microscopic limits on the testimony to be received. It is well known to any lawyer or court that when a witness is called to the stand, the testimony given leads to further material and competent testimony. Here the Board at the first hearing had refused to permit Respondent to go into the question of whether from the employees' standpoint the DGWU was freely and voluntarily formed and administered. Had Respondent been permitted at the first hearing to pursue this inquiry, it would naturally have led to the disclosure that Instructors, Thread Girls, Head Cutters, etc., were not generally regarded as supervisory employes but were eligible to membership in garment company unions. When the court remanded the case to permit Respondent to pursue this inquiry, it obviously intended that Respondent should be allowed some latitude in proving the facts which it had sought to prove in the first place, to show that there was no employee domination.

And since the Board in both decisions finds that Instructors, Thread Girls, etc., are supervisory employees, obviously the latitude should have included testimony tending to show that they were not generally regarded as supervisory employees, as that would tend to show no domination from that source. The court (123 F. 2d l. c. 222) says:

> "We have no doubt that the testimony offered * * * to prove * * * that the union was free from employer influence, domination and support * * * should have been received."

That this evidence was well within the contemplation of the court is further evidenced by the court's comments (p. 224) that a Trial Examiner should receive all evidence offered unless palpably incompetent and that "we say this in the hope of preventing a repetition of what occurred in the case now before us, and to obviate any misunderstanding as to what the attitude of this court is with respect to the taking of evidence in a hearing before a special master or a trial examiner."

But the Trial Examiner and Board gave no more heed to this admonition than they did to the court's mandate to receive and consider the employee testimony, discussed supra.

The excluded evidence in question was competent and material and should have been received and the court below was justified in refusing to enforce the Board's order reached in disregard of the remand and without benefit or consideration of this evidence.

The Board's argument (p. 88) that "parties shall not present their causes of action or their defenses piecemeal" comes with little grace from the Board considering the valiant but unavailing efforts and objections of Respondent, covering some 40-odd pages of the record (IX, 3276-3306, 3330-34, 3427-29, 3471-3, 3476-9; X, 3552, 3574-5, 3662, 3666, 3668-9), to obtain a ruling that the Board should not be permitted at the second hearing to re-present its case in chief.

Also the Board's argument (pp. 88-89) that the evidence was of "remote relevance" is likewise fallacious. The Ranco and other cases quoted, supra, decided by the Board itself, show beyond question the great relevance of this evidence. The International Machinists case and the other cases cited at page 89 are not to the contrary. Of course, the fact that Instructors, etc., are generally regarded as not being supervisory employes but as eligible to membership in unions, does not preclude the Board, in good faith, from finding an employer responsible for the acts of such employes if the circumstances so justify. Under the test in the International Machinists case an employer might be liable for the acts of his office boy if it had vested authority in him to speak and act for the management in labor matters. The Board (p. 90) virtually concedes the relevance and materiality of the excluded evidence when it says such evidence is not "controlling." But the fact that it is not controlling does not militate against the correctness of the ruling of the court below that the evidence should have been received and considered. The cases cited by the Board (pp. 89-90) are not to the contrary.

(6) Refusal to permit respondent to examine Wave Tobin as to threats and violence of ILGWU, and concerning eligibility of "Instructors," etc., to participate in unions, and generally.

The Trial Examiner refused to let respondent examine Wave Tobin at all (VIII, 2561-2-3; IX, 3257).

She was manager of the Kansas City locals of the ILGWU and was in direct charge of the strikes at the Gernes, Gordon, and Missouri garment plants in Kansas City in March and April of 1937. Her proffered testimony had a bearing on several phases of the case (see Respondent's offers of proof 1-SSSSS and 1-TTTTT, X, 3787-3790).

After first letting her testify for a short while the Trial Examiner stopped her testimony (VIII, 2543), ruling that he would "first" hear the 1,200 employees (VIII, 2556, 2561). But later he refused to let her be recalled to the stand to testify as to anything (X, 3257, X 3783), rejecting respondent's said offers of proof (X, 3782-3783), and struck out entirely the little testimony which she had given (IX, 3257). The Board's refusal to permit respondent to call and examine Wave Tobin therefore became not merely a ruling on the "order of proof," but the total exclusion of Wave Tobin as a witness, and hence was arbitrary, unfair, and contrary to all concepts of a fair trial.

The materiality of the offered testimony of Wave Tobin has been discussed under other points, supra, and we do not here repeat.

The Court was "not in error" in ruling that such testimony should have been received.

Rulings on Rebuttal Evidence, etc.

Respondent also urges that it was denied a fair trial by reason of the Trial Examiner's rulings on "rebuttal" evidence, at the second hearing.

The Board contends that it complied with the remand because it permitted Mrs. Reed and 11 employee witnesses to testify for respondent. But the Trial Examiner did not stop there, but permitted the Board to introduce additional evidence which was not "rebuttal" but was additional evidence upon its case in chief. Respondent objected strenuously to the trial examiner's thus opening up the entire case (see IX, 3276-3306, 3330-34, 3427-29, 3471-73, 3476-79; X, 3552, 3574-5, 3662, 3666, 3668-9), but without avail.

But that was not all. After permitting the Board and ILGWU to put on all the witnesses they had ("Miss Weyand: Well, I can't say until we finish with this witness, whether I will have another witness or not. Possibly I will not." X, 3687), to bolster their case in chief, the trial examiner not only held petitioner strictly to rebuttal of the Board's so-called "rebuttal" witnesses (X, 3712-13-14-15-16-17, 3721, 3726) but limited petitioner's rebuttal witnesses to three witnesses from each of two sewing sections (X, 3727-30, 3744-5), rejecting respondent's offers of proof.

It seems obvious that if petitioner was entitled to rebut the Board's rebuttal evidence at all, it was entitled to do so by any competent and material evidence which would tend to rebut it, including witnesses from other sections of the plant (III, 757).

The unfairness and prejudicial effect of thus restricting and limiting petitioner's evidence, consists in the fact that the Board's witnesses purported to testify as to general conditions in the plant, e. g. that union meetings were held during working hours (IX, 3312, 3430, 3551, 3666) and that employes were paid for time spent at union meetings, etc. Respondent was entitled to disprove the Board's rebuttal testimony by such a large number of employees from all over the plant that it would be apparent that the testimony of the Board's witnesses should not be accepted.

Furthermore, after allowing the Board's rebuttal witnesses to cover practically all phases of the Board's case in chief, the trial examiner refused to let petitioner put on any evidence except employee witnesses (We refer to the proffered testimony of Erwin Feidman, Wave Tobin, the ILGWU contracts, etc.).

The Trial Examiner permitted Mrs. Reed to testify at the second hearing because she was unable to be present at the first hearing. He then struck out all of her testimony relating to events or conditions after the first hearing. The Board seeks to make it appear that this was at the suggestion of counsel for respondent, but respondent's only suggestion was that the evidence should be confined to the charges in the complaint (VII, 2 .2). The question arose because of the fact that during the cross-examination of Mrs. Reed by counsel for the Board counsel handed Mrs. Reed a document, Ex. 32A to 32D (XI, 4061, 4063, 4067, 4069) filed in the Wage and Hour Division, dated October 30, 1940, to which counsel had stapled on the inside (VII, 2283) another, wholly separate, Wage and Hour document, Ex. 32-E (XI, 4065) relating to a different date, making it appear that it was a part of the document dated October 30, 1940. Despite this, Mrs. Reed did not change her testimony, although she could not understand the contents of the second document being a part of the earlier document. Counsel for the ILGWU later continued the examination as to said exhibits (VII, 2454-2520). After the stapling together of the two documents was disclosed, and no evidence favorable to the Board was developed, the Board contended that all testimony relating to a period subsequent to the first trial should be stricken, and this was done.

We respectfully submit that as to each and all of the six items or types of evidence excluded, the Court below was "not in error" in ruling that it should have been received and considered by the Board, and further submit that if the Court was right as to any one of the six items or rulings, this Court should not disturb the decision.

(b)

THE COURT WAS NOT IN ERROR IN RULING THAT THE BOARD SHOULD HAVE DESIGNATED A DIFFERENT TRIAL EXAMINER FOR THE SECOND HEARING.

Respondent in its Application for Designation of Another Trial Examiner for the second hearing made a very strong showing that Trial Examiner Batten had prejudged respondent's most important evidence (A. 475, 483, 493). Batten's mind was completely saturated with the view that the testimony of the 1,200 employees concerned (as to "how and why" they formed and joined the DGWU and that they did so freely and voluntarily, without coercion) was completely worthless and immaterial. It was, therefore, impossible for him to fairly evaluate that testimony, as respondent was entitled to have it evaluated.

We do not take the space here to set out Batten's repeated assertions in the first hearing that he considered the employees' testimony completely worthless and immaterial. Many of his statements and rulings excluding this and other material evidence offered by Respondent are collected in Respondent's Application to the Board for the Designation of a different Trial Examiner (A. 474-493 inclusive), and show beyond question a state of mind and a fixed unalterable opinion toward Respondent and its evidence that disqualified him to sit as Trial Examiner in the second hearing.

This is not a situation (like mere erroneous rulings on admission or rejection of evidence), that might be corrected on appeal, for Batten's prejudice against Respondent and his prejudgment of Respondent's evidence permeated every finding that he made in his 40-page report to the Board and likewise permeated every finding of the Board, because the Board adopted his report in toto. Who can say that many or all of these adverse findings, and the conclusions based thereon, would not have been different if the evidence had been considered and evaluated by an impartial, unbiased Trial Examiner?

On appeal from the Board's last decision therefore, we were not (under this point), merely urging error in the rejection of evidence—we were asking the court below to correct an error that went deeper—to refuse to enforce findings which were not fairly arrived at because of the disqualification of the Trial Examiner who made them.

That Batten had completely prejudged the case against Respondent was known before the second hearing —it was not known before the first hearing. Therefore, when the case was remanded by the court to the Board for a further hearing, a new situation was presented. A trial examiner was designated to rehear the case who had repeatedly and most vociferously expressed his view that the evidence to be introduced was absolutely worthless and immaterial (II, 658, 614, 704f). He was now to "receive" it (due to the order of the Court) but his view as to its immateriality was not changed. A well-known proverb is apropos here: "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink." The court could make trial examiner Batten "receive" the evidence but it did not succeed in making him or the Board treat it as material, which is equivalent to refusing to receive it altogethe

The importance of the Trial Examiner's functions and the prejudicial effect on Respondent of Batten's redesignation are forcefully demonstrated by the fact that the Board adopted verbatim all of his intermediate report (save only for very minor correction, A, 620). The decision of the Board which we are opposing is to all intents and purposes the findings and decision of Batten, and his prejudgments and prejudices are carried forward in full into the Board's decision and order. When Congress provided for hearings before an agent, designated by the Board (29 U. S. C. A., Sec. 160), it contemplated a hearing by an impartial agent or trial examiner. The courts have commented on the fact that since the Board is both prosecutor and judge, special care should be taken to insure an impartial trial (NLRB v. Sands Mfg. Co., 96 F. 2d 721, l. c. 726-7; NLRB v. Western Cartridge Co., 138 F. 2d 551, l. c. 552-3; NLRB v. Washington Dehydrated Food Co., 118 F. 2d 980, 997; NLRB v. Indiana M. & E. Co., supra; Cf. Borchard v. California Bank, 310 U. S. 311, 316-17).

The Board did not follow these precepts here, but deliberately redesignated Batten over respondent's strenuous protest (A. 474-493, 502-3), thereby denying to respondent a fair trial.

It is impossible to read this record and the two intermediate reports of the Trial Examiner without being convinced that he, and through him the Labor Board, have closed their eyes to all evidence favorable to Respondent and considered only the evidence favorable to the Board's and ILGWU's position. For example, in both his intermediate reports, the Trial Examiner finds that there was no meeting of employees held on or about March 30, 1937 (A, 520, X, 3873, footnote 42), although all employes permitted to testify testified that they actually attended such meeting and related what occurred at the meeting, and an offer of proof was made that the remaining employees would testify to the same effect (III, 760). This finding was made despite the fact that no person testified to the contrary. The reason for this amazing finding is not hard to find: At this meeting the employees agreed to contribute 50c apiece to finance the employment of Mr. Tyler as attorney for the employees. Such fact destroyed the Trial Examiner's pet theory that the Loyalty League furnished this money. So the Trial Examiner, in order to get around this difficulty, adopted the convenient expedient of merely ignoring all such testimony and finding that there was no such meeting!

He even went so far as to find that the March 2nd statement was a part of the Loyalty League's plan (A. 516), although there is no evidence at all that the Loyalty League had anything to do with the March 2nd statement. The Trial Examiner's treatment of Respondent's evidence here is well described by the 5th Circuit in NLRB v. McGough Bakeries Corp., 153 F. 2d 420 (l. c. 421-422):

> "The intermediate report of the trial examiner seems to us more like a trial argument than a judicial deliverance. Every issue without exception he found in favor of the Union. He resolved every conflict in testimony, whether serious or trivial, in favor of the Union. With complete consistency he found every witness for the Union reliable and truthful, and every opposing witness whether the Company's president and supervisors, or Independent's adherents, untruthful and unreliable. Even witnesses called by the Board were reliable when they testified favorably to the Union, but otherwise not reliable."

The Court below is entitled to some latitude and discretion in determining whether it shall enforce an order of the Board upon a hearing so conducted (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 28). It was not merely a question of Batten's erroneous rulings in the first hearing, which could be reviewed on appeal; it was a question of "preventing his future action in the pending cause" (Ex Parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35, l. c. 44) when he had pre-judged the case. Here the circumstances amply justify the Court's ruling that the Board should have appointed a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing, and the Court's refusal to enforce the Board's order was proper (NLRB v. Henry K. Phelps, Jr., Trustee, (5 C. C. A.) 136 F. 2d 562, l. c. 566-7; NLRB v. Washington Dehydrated Food Co., supra).

The Board's Argument.

The Board in its brief presents no answer to the foregoing. It cites American Steel Barrel Co., Ex parte, 230 U. S. 35. That case is authority for Respondent's position rather than for the Board's position, for in that case this court held (l. c. 43-44):

> "The basis of the disqualification * * * was never intended to enable a discontented litigant to oust a judge because of adverse rulings made, for such rulings are reviewable otherwise, but to prevent his future action in the pending cause."

That is precisely what Respondent sought here, in asking for a different Trial Examiner at the second hearing—to prevent Batten's "future action in the pending cause."

Nor does the Board's argument that, in theory, the Board may "accept some or reject all" of the Trial Examiner's findings and recommendations correct the error in redesignating Batten here. Even if it may reject the Trial Examiner's report that does not mean that Congress intended that employers must submit their cases before a Trial Examiner who has prejudged the case against them.

The Board here knew from Respondent's protest that Batten would not and could not give a fair, unbiased hearing to Respondent's evidence. It knew, therefore, that it would be deprived of the benefit of a fair, unbiased report. Assuming, therefore, that the Board (after receipt of the Trial Examiner's report) should try "in good faith" to determine the case fairly, it could not from any realistic standpoint do so, for it must and does depend largely on the Trial Examiner's findings and conclusions, as is conclusively shown here by its adoption of Batten's report in toto.

The familiarity of Batten with the prior record (p. 84) is small reason for denying a litigant a fair hearing.

(c)

IN ANY EVENT, THE COURT'S RULINGS WERE NOT SO COMPLETELY WRONG AS TO CONSTITUTE AN ABUSE OF ITS JUDICIAL POWER AND DISCRETION.

But even if the Court below was "in error" in its determination as to the materiality of one or more, or even all, of these matters, nevertheless this Court should not disturb the decision unless the Court below in so ruling was so completely wrong as to constitute an abuse of its discretion and power.

As said in the Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 16, the Court below must "not only have been in error" but must also "have abused its judicial discretion," to warrant this court in reviewing its decision.

Congress in setting up the procedure under the National Labor Relations Act vested in the Circuit Court of Appeals the power and discretion of determining (under certain limitations) whether the Board's order should be enforced. It was not contemplated by Congress that every decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals should be reviewed by this court. Congress was familiar with the policy of this court that it would not ordinarily review on certiorari decisions of the Circuit Court of Appeals except those falling within the scope of Rule 38 of this Court, and, with that knowledge, Congress made no further provision for review by this court of Labor Board cases. A wide latitude of discretion must be allowed to the Circuit Court of Appeals in passing upon such matters, and within such wide range the Circuit Court's discretion and determination as to matters such as those involved here, should be accorded finality in enforcement cases and not be disturbed by this court on certiorari, except for abuse of discretion.

The case at bar comes especially within that range for the court below has, in good faith, exercised its power and discretion upon six different types of evidence and upon the qualifications of the Trial Examiner, as well as upon the Board's refusal to obey the spirit or letter of the Court's first remand, and has refused to enforce the Board's order. In so doing it has not abused its discretion, "even though in this court's view such evidence would be a matter of indifference," or this court might have reached a different conclusion (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 16).

In the review of Labor Board cases, the Circuit Court of Appeals acts in accord with equitable principles.

In Ford Motor Co. v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 364, 373, the court says:

> "The jurisdiction to review the orders of the Labor Relations Board is vested in a court with equity powers, and while the court must act within the bounds of the statute and without intruding upon the administrative province, it may adjust its relief to the > exigencies of the case in accordance with the equitable principles governing judicial action. The purpose of the judicial review is consonant with that of the administrative proceeding itself—to secure a just result with a minimum of technical requirements."

The court below acted in accordance with equity and good conscience in refusing to enforce the Board's order. Here is an employer (Respondent) which has consistently striven to comply with both the spirit and the letter of the National Labor Relations Act; its treatment of employees has always been of the best, and when they organized a union under the National Labor Relations Act and demanded recognition, Respondent dealt with them in full compliance with the Act. It was unjust to subject Respondent to the great expense of a third trial before the Labor Board with no assurance that the Board would, the third time, give any greater consideration to Respondent's evidence than it had done in the first and second hearings. The same applies to the employees (DGWU)—who, instead of being accorded the benefits of the Act by the tribunal designed for that purpose, have been forced by that tribunal to engage in expensive litigation for a period of 9 years to achieve and retain the rights expressly guaranteed to them by the Act. How many times should a court return a cause to a lower tribunal or court which flaunts its mandates? The language of the 5th Circuit in National Labor Relations Board v. McGough Bakeries Co. (l. c. 421) is applicable here:

> "It is our duty, as well as the Board's, to see that the Act is properly and fairly applied, and not brought into disrepute by unlawful or palpably unjust applications of it."

In NLRB v. Prettyman, 6 Cir., 117 F. 2d 786, the Court said, l. c. 791:

"The Court is not compelled to enforce an order of the Board which is impregnated with a hearing not comporting with the standards of fairness inherent in procedural due process."

To the same effect see NLRB v. Newberry L. & C. Co., 123 F. 2d 831, l. c. 838; Inland Steel Co. v. NLRB, 7 Cir., 109 F. 2d 9, l. c. 20-21.

In view of all the circumstances here involved—the unanimous choice of the DGWU by respondent's employees; the steadfast adherence of the employees to that choice for 9 years; the meagerness and circumstantial nature of the testimony relied on by the Board as showing coercion, and the overwhelming direct testimony to the contrary; the two long and expensive hearings to which Respondent has been subjected; the twice-repeated failure of the Board to permit Respondent to introduce material evidence; and the refusal of the Board to obey the spirit of the court's remand to consider as material the evidence which the court had held to be material—the court was amply justified in the exercise of its equity powers and the power and discretion vested in it by the National Labor Relations Act, in refusing to enforce the Board's order.

We respectfully submit that if the court below was to "adjust its relief to the exigencies of the case" and "secure a just result with a minimum of technical requirements," it chose the right course. Equity demands that the respondent have surcease from this unjustified prosecution. The judgment should be affirmed.

PART TWO.

From the foregoing, we feel that the court is justified in affirming the decision below without going into the merits. But there is an additional and even more potent reason why the decision of the court below should be affirmed; namely, that the Board's order is not supported by the evidence.

The court below did not pass on that phase of the case (XIII, 37). We understand that ordinarily this court does not rule on questions of fact which have not been passed upon by the court below (Manufacturers' Finance Co. v. McKey, 294 U. S. 442, l. c. 453-4; Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Walters, 294 U. S. 405, l. c. 432-3; Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U. S. 321, l. c. 331), but we assume that the court has power to do so and in some instances has done so (Ecker v. Western Pacific Ry. Co., 318 U. S. 448, 489). As the court in granting certiorari herein placed no limitations on the matters to be reviewed, we now present this phase of the case:

I.

The Board's Findings, Conclusions and Order Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

A.

The DIRECT Evidence Is OVERWHELMING That Respondent's Employees Formed and Operated the DGWU of Their Own Free Will and Accord Without Coercion or Interference by Respondent.

This is not a case where the employees of a company are about evenly divided upon the choice of a union or bargaining representative—where slight influence by the employer might tip the scales one way or the other. It is not even a 70-30% or 90-10% division—here all of the 1300-odd working employees of respondent (excepting possibly two or three employees) wanted the DGWU as their union and bargaining representative and they unanimously formed and joined that union on or about April 27, 1937 (I, 80b). The organization of the DGWU was so decisive and spontaneous as to leave no doubt that the employees wholeheartedly wanted and chose that union as their bargaining representative. Practically all of the 1300-odd employees of respondent joined the union at a meeting held on April 27th. A few employees, not present at the meeting, joined a few days later (I, 80b, 80c). It may be fairly said, therefore, that the DGWU was the unanimous choice of the working employees of respondent.

That the DGWU was not only the unanimous but was the voluntary choice of the employees, without coercion or interference on the part of the respondent, is also shown by overwhelming evidence. As practically all of the employees joined the DGWU at the April 27th meeting, and as there is no appreciable conflict in the evidence as to what occurred at that meeting, the court will readily see, from a review of the evidence concerning that meeting, that the evidence is overwhelming that the employees wanted that union and formed and joined it of their own free will. Respondent in the first hearing desired to call as witnesses as many of the employees and members of the DGWU as the Trial Examiner would permit, and let them testify as to whether they formed and joined the DGWU of their own free will and without coercion or interference by respondent. Respondent called the employees as witnesses until stopped by the Trial Examiner and all who were permitted to testify on the subject testified that they joined the DGWU voluntarily as their free choice without any coercion or interference on the part of respondent or its management. However, the Trial Examiner held that this testimony was immaterial and refused to receive or consider it, and it was because of such refusal that the Court below remanded the case on the first appeal. When the Trial Examiner refused to hear the testimony of further employees, respondent offered to prove by all available employees and members of the DGWU that they joined that union of their own free will without any coercion or interference by petitioner or the management (See Board's exhibit 1-OOOO, R. III, 743.[1] This offer of proof was rejected by the Trial Examiner.

On the second hearing, in pursuance of the court's remand, respondent again called the employees as witnesses (until stopped by the Trial Examiner) to obtain their testimony which the Trial Examiner had refused to receive at the first hearing, and all such employees testified that there was no coercion or interference by respondent or its management regarding their union affiliations, but that they formed and joined the DGWU of their own free will and desire. When the Trial Examiner stopped respondent from calling further employees as witnesses, respondent renewed its offer as contained in

---

[1] By said offer of proof, petitioner offered to prove by said witnesses (among other things) the following (III, pp. 755-756-757):

"That he (or she) joined the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union of his own free will and accord, uninfluenced by the Donnelly Garment Company or Donnelly Garment Sales Company or by any officer, executive or supervisory employee thereof, or by anyone representing the management of said companies; that since said time he has continued to belong to and support said Donnelly Garment Workers' Union of his own free will and accord, uninfluenced by the management of said companies or by anyone representing the management of said companies; * * *

"That he does not know of and has never heard of the Donnelly Garment Company or Donnelly Garment Sales Company, or any officer, executive, supervisory employee or anyone representing the management of said companies, doing or saying anything either prior or subsequent to the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union on April 27, 1937, calculated or tending to encourage, promote or foster membership in the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union or in any 'plant union' or tending to discourage membership in the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union or local thereof. * * *"

Board's Ex. 1-OOOO, to make similar proof by all of the available employees (IX, 3265), and 1-VVVVV (X, 3792-3).

This, we respectfully submit, constitutes overwhelming direct proof that there was no coercion or interference by respondent or its management, with respect to the choice of a labor union by its employees, as the proof offered was direct testimony of the very persons whom the Board claims were coerced, that they were not coerced but acted of their own free will in forming and joining the DGWU. This is the highest and most potent evidence that could be produced on that issue. If any coercion was used upon the employees, they certainly are the ones who would know about it.

Not "Conclusionary" Evidence.

Nor was this "conclusionary" evidence, as it is referred to by the Board (A. 619). It is testimony as to facts. The witnesses were asked, not only, "did you join the DGWU of your own free will," but were asked questions such as these: "Did any officer, executive or anyone that you thought was representing the management talk to you about the meeting?" (of April 27th) (VIII, 2565); "Now, prior to that meeting, had anyone, any officer, executive, or anyone representing the management suggested to you or suggested to anybody else in your presence that the employees form a union?" (R. VIII, 2566); "Now, at any of these meetings that you have described, did your instructors request you to attend the meetings?" (p. 2571); "Did any official, executive, or representative of the management request you to sign the petition?" (of March 2nd) (p. 2578); "Did the instructor ask you to sign the petition?" (p. 2579); "Did you gain the impression from any source, or did you understand that the Loyalty League had anything to do with the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union?" (p. 2582); "Did you ever hear anybody in the factory say that Rose Todd represents the employers about labor matters?" (p. 2593) etc., etc. The answers to all these questions were in the negative. Those and many other similar answers constituted testimony as to facts, not conclusions.

But we also submit that the answers that the employees "joined the DGWU of their own free will and without coercion on the part of the respondent" is testimony as to a fact—i. e. the state of mind of the witnesses—and as to the fact that such state of mind was not created by duress of respondent. Furthermore, this fact (whether any pressure was brought to bear on the witness to cause her to join the DGWU) was a fact as to which she was the most qualified person in the world to testify, and her testimony as to such fact ought to be held to be conclusive (i. e. the purpose of the NLR Act is to permit employees to join any union they want to join—when they say "this is the union we want," that ordinarily should end the matter—the only exception, of course, being proof of a "prior" company-dominated union, or such direct and positive evidence as to negative the employees' statement, neither of which exists here).

We respectfully submit that the Board is in error in deeming this evidence of the employees to be merely "conclusionary," and has committed even more flagrant error in treating it as "immaterial"—as such action by the Board is equivalent to a refusal to receive the evidence at all.

That the DGWU was the voluntary choice of all the employees is further shown by the affidavits, made in the months of May and June, 1939, and signed by some 1,195 employees and members of the DGWU, which affidavits were offered in evidence as Intervener's Exhibit 20A to 20KK (rejected). This exhibit appears in the record (R VI, 1677 et seq.),[2] where the actual signatures of such employees, sworn to before a notary public, appear.

Also at page 783, Volume III of the Record, the interveners offered to produce and examine, under oath as witnesses, the 1,165 persons who signed the affidavits (Exhibit 20A to 20KK) and to prove by said witnesses "that they joined and have at all times remained members of said Donnelly Garment Workers' Union of their own free will and without coercion, intimidation, or other influence of their employer."

This offer of proof was renewed by intervener in the second hearing when the Trial Examiner refused to let intervener put on any witnesses (IX, 3264).

The various offers of proof of testimony by the employees and members of the DGWU appear at III, 743 to 795, inclusive, and 1-VVVVV, X, 3792-3, and cover many other matters tending to show that there was no coercion or interference by respondent.

In addition to the foregoing direct testimony by the persons who would have been influenced or affected by coercion (if there had been any coercion) the testimony as to the circumstances and action taken at the April 27th meeting (at which the DGWU was organized), shows that the formation of the DGWU was the voluntary action of those present—and since practically all of the working employees were present at that meeting, and since all necessary action toward forming the union was taken at said meeting, the circumstances of said meeting, disclosed by the minutes and by the direct testimony, constitutes well-nigh conclusive proof that the DGWU was the free choice of the employees, as there is no appreciable discrepancy in the oral testimony as to what occurred at that meeting. The minutes of the meeting of April 27, 1937, are in evidence at III, 821. There is substantial harmony between the minutes and the testimony of the Board's, respondent's and intervener's witnesses as to the substance of what occurred at said meeting.

---

[2] Said affidavits, Exhibit 20A to 20KK, contained the following language:

> "We, the undersigned employees of the Donnelly Garment Company and the Donnelly Garment Sales Company of Kansas City, Missouri, below the rank of officer or any position carrying with it the right to employ or discharge, again reassert under oath that it is their free, voluntary, and considered wish and choice to belong to the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union and not to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union or any other union."

In addition to the testimony of the employees that there was no coercion, respondent's officials (Lee Baty, Production Manager, Mrs. James A. Reed, President, Mrs. Reeves, Merchandise Manager, Mr. Keyes, General Sales Manager) testified that there was no coercion or interference by the management with respect to the union affiliations of the employees.

In addition to all the foregoing—and confirmatory thereof—the DGWU had continued for 5 years at the time of the last hearing (now 9 years), as the active and satisfactory choice of the employees as their bargaining agency. Had it not been their voluntary choice, it would have long since been uprooted by the employees, who in these days are not at all timorous, either in Texas or Missouri, in asserting their rights and desires.

(In the case of Humble Oil & Ref. Co. v. NLRB, 113 F. 2d 85, l. c. 92, the Court, in speaking of the independence of employees said "Texans have never been remarkable for timorousness.")

In opposition to this overwhelming array of witnesses and evidence that the respondent did not coerce or interfere with its employees in the formation of the DGWU, the Board in the first trial was able to produce as witnesses only two former employees, May Fike and Elsa Lou Greenhaw. (Rose Todd, called by the Board, testified that the employees formed the DGWU of their own free will; Bertha Estes was called by the Board merely for the purpose of inquiring whether the Loyalty League kept minutes; Pauline Hartman, called by the Board, was not asked about the formation of the DGWU but was examined with reference to activities and expenditures of the Loyalty League; and Jack McConaughey, called by the Board, was examined only with respect to the books of account of the DGWU.)

May Fike did not testify to any coercion at the April 27th organizational meeting. Her testimony appears in I, 328c-331. Her testimony shows that cards were passed out and the employees voted to form the DGWU, and the rest of her testimony does not vary substantially from the minutes or other testimony as to what occurred at said meeting. At page 328D, she testifies that the instructor in her section notified the operators of the meeting: "A. She sent everybody to the second floor, she said there was going to be a meeting and everybody should stay in a body so we could get back to work together, or something like that." This is the only intimation in May Fike's testimony that even smacks of coercion. She does not indicate that the instructor or anyone else suggested what action she should take with reference to the formation of a union, and her testimony that the instructor "sent" the operators to the meeting is contrary to the testimony of all of respondent's and intervener's witnesses. Of course, respondent contends not only that May Fike's testimony (that the instructor purported to "send" the employees to the meeting of April 27th) was false but also contends that the instructor did not represent the management in any event. In another part of this brief we have discussed the unreliability, generally, of May Fike's testimony. Even the Trial Examiner deemed her testimony so unreliable that he refused to recommend her reinstatement (X, 3891-2).

Elsa Lou Greenhaw gave no testimony concerning what happened at the April 27th meeting. At p. 354-d, Volume I, she testified that she was notified of the meeting by Miss Alexander: "A. Yes. Somebody in the department asked us to go to the second floor for a meeting." Mrs. Greenhaw, however, did attempt to testify that there was coercion on the part of the management, but when asked to tell what the coercion was and to name the persons who engaged in coercion, she was unable to do so except to testify as follows: She testified with respect to Mrs. Reeves (I, 370) that Mrs. Reeves said nothing to her personally and that she did not personally see her engaged in any coercion with other employees; with respect to coercive statements by Mrs. Keyes, she testified p. 373, Volume II: "A. Well, there were a number of statements. One I remember particularly about the employees being careful with their voting. Q. Voting for what? A. During the general election in 1936." As to the alleged coercion of Mr. Keyes, she testified p. 378G, Volume II: "A. The incidents I recall particularly happened during the summer of 1936 when Mr. Keyes called several employees in to reprimand them for their work, and they had been working at such a high rate of speed, top speed, that they were so nervous they didn't know what they were doing and they burst out crying * * *."

Even the Trial Examiner held that the alleged coercion as to voting in the general election of 1936 and the reprimand concerning work in 1936 had nothing to do with the issues in this case (II, 378G).

Although the Trial Examiner in his first Intermediate Report relied greatly on the testimony of Mrs. Greenhaw, as having given her testimony in a "straightforward and unhesitating" manner (A, 519), the Board recognized the weakness and unreliability of her testimony and practically ignored it, as did the Trial Examiner also in his second Intermediate Report, and the Board in its final order and decision. The respondent will gladly welcome a reading of Mrs. Greenhaw's testimony by the court which will disclose her extreme animus toward respondent, the evasiveness and unreliability of her testimony (I, 369-372, II, 373-375), and that her testimony as given constitutes no proof of any charge in the complaint.

At the second hearing, the Board called six additional former employees of petitioner—Etta Dorsey, Lola Skeens, Geneva Copenhaver, Bessie Weilert, Margaret Keyes and May Stevens.

None of these witnesses testified to any direct coercion or influence brought to bear on them or upon any other employees by respondent with respect to joining the DGWU or as to their union affiliations in any way. Their testimony relates wholly to "circumstances" from which the Board seeks to infer domination. If there had been any actual coercion they would certainly have testified about it. The fact that they didn't is most potent evidence that there was none. The "circumstantial" evidence should be considered in the light of this fact and when so considered it becomes most evident that the Trial Examiner and Board's findings are not justified, but are based wholly on conjecture and desire to convict rather on the evidence.

Etta Dorsey did not testify as to any coercion or interference by respondent either upon her or upon any other employee with respect to joining the DGWU. On the contrary, on cross examination she testified that the statements in her affidavit (Intervener's Exhibit 20A to 20KK), to the effect that the DGWU was her free and voluntary choice, were true (VI, 1675). Her testimony related principally to alleged "circumstances" from which the Board attempts to "infer" coercion. In appraising Mrs. Dorsey's testimony, it should be noted that she was "mad" at the Donnelly management. She testified (IX, 3364) that she "quit in March of this year because I was not treated right," and that "I was mad at some of the people down there, they didn't treat me right." "Well, that Cecile Ealy is a snake in the grass." "Well, I will admit I got a little mad at Mrs. Reed because she didn't hear me * * *." "Q. You were mad and venomous about this whole matter, weren't you? Just boiling mad, aren't you?" "A. Yes, when her name (Cecile Ealy) comes up it makes me mad."

Lola Skeens likewise, did not testify to any coercion by respondent as to herself or as to any other employees as to forming or joining the DGWU. On the contrary, she testified that the statements in her affidavit (Intervener's Exhibit 20A to 20KK) were true (IX, 3462), that the DGWU was her free and voluntary choice.

Mrs. Skeens' testimony, also, related only to alleged "circumstances" which the Board claims show coercion.

The evidence regarding these alleged "circumstances" is discussed later in this brief.

Attention is also called to the fact that Mrs. Skeens quit her employment at the Donnelly plant because she was peeved over a change in her work which the management asked her to make (IX, 3463).

Geneva Copenhaver testified to no acts or words of coercion by the management but testified (IX, 3471) that she signed the membership card at the April 27th meeting because "I felt like I had better, if I wanted my job," but she later testified that the statements in her affidavit (Intervener's Exhibit 20A to 20KK) were true to the effect that she joined the DGWU "under our own free will" and that "the company never intimidated me one way or the other * * *" (pp. 3492-3).

Bessie Weilert testified (X, 3580-81) that at the time the DGWU was organized, she thought it was formed by the employees for their own benefit but that she later changed her mind and formed the opinion that it was company-dominated. However, she testified (pp. 3592, 3601) that she was satisfied with the DGWU and believed it was representing the wishes and interests of the employees, until she was elected on the committee in 1939. So, for two years after the formation of the DGWU she evidently saw no signs of domination. She also testified (p. 3614) that in 1939 when she signed intervener's offer of proof (Exhibit 1-RRRR), she was of the opinion that the union was the free will choice of the employees, "as far as I knew about it then." She testified to no acts or words of coercion by petitioner but when asked about her affidavit (Intervener's Exhibit 20A to 20KK), she testified that she "didn't feel that way" and when asked if she swore to something that was not true in that affidavit, she answered, "It seems that I did" (pp. 3594-5).

It appears from page 3578 and from Mrs. Weilert's testimony, generally, that she was "peeved" at the management, and that she quit her employment because she was asked to do some repair work.

Margaret Keyes testified to no coercion and, in fact, testified (p. 3660) that "I knew nothing whatsoever of the union activities in the Donnelly Garment Company, * * *"

May Stevens testified to no acts or words of coercion by the respondent but testified (X, 3667) that she signed the membership card at the April 27th meeting because "I felt that I had to do it to hold my job." However, she made affidavit in 1939 (Intervener's Exhibit 20A to 20KK) that it was her "free, voluntary and considered wish" to belong to the DGWU. On the stand, she testified that the affidavit was false when she swore to it (pp. 3692-3) and that she knew when she made the affidavit that she was swearing to a false affidavit (p. 3703). Also, in 1939, she signed intervener's offer of proof (Exhibit 1-RRRR), stating that she joined the DGWU of "her own free will" and had "not been influenced by any threats, coercion or pressure" of the employer, or any representative of the employer. On the stand, she testified that at the time she signed said offer of proof, it was false (p. 3690).

Summing up the Board's direct testimony, attention is called to the fact that at least five of said witnesses for the Board (May Fike, Elsa Lou Greenhaw, Etta Dorsey, Lola Skeens and Bessie Weilert) had a personal grievance against the Donnelly Company and that the sixth, Mrs. Keyes, testified that she "knew nothing whatsoever of the union activities"; and that five of said witnesses (Etta Dorsey, Lola Skeens, Geneva Copenhaver, Bessie Weilert and May Stevens) had previously made affidavits under oath, as to the DGWU "being their free choice";

This constitutes substantial impeachment of the credibility of the Board's chief witness, with no impeachment of the 1,200 employees testifying to the contrary.

The Board offered no other direct testimony of coercion or interference. The rest of the Board's testimony deals with alleged "circumstances" which it claims constituted domination and interference. All this testimony is circumstantial and respondent contends that the alleged inferences drawn by the Board therefrom are based on suspicion; conjecture and surmise and not on any substantial evidence of domination or interference by the respondent, and do not rise to the height of legitimate inferences, especially in view of the contrary overwhelming direct and positive testimony on the part of respondent's employees that there was no coercion, and in view of the fact that even the Board's witnesses did not testify to any direct acts or words of coercion upon them.

Also, the minutes (III, 821) and testimony as to just what occurred at the organization meeting on April 27th, show conclusively that there was no coercion or interference by respondent in the formation of the DGWU but that it was voluntary to the Nth degree.

The testimony of the Board's witnesses as to the alleged "circumstances" on which the Board relies (such as that the DGWU meetings were held during working hours, etc.), is greatly weakened on cross examination and is contrary to respondent's "1200 witnesses" and we contend does not impinge upon the overwhelming and conclusive direct testimony that there was no coercion.

We believe that it may be fairly stated that the direct testimony is overwhelming—we feel it is conclusive—to the effect that the employees formed and joined the DGWU of their own free will and without any coercion or interference by respondent; and unless the Board's "circumstantial" evidence is so strong as to justify the overriding of this overwhelming direct evidence, we respectfully submit that the Board's order should be set aside.

We now proceed to a discussion of the "circumstantial" evidence upon which the Board relies.

B.

The "Circumstantial" Evidence of the Board Is Also Contrary to the Overwhelming Direct Testimony and Does Not Support the Board's Findings and Conclusions.

It might not be amiss, here, to state that even as to this "circumstantial" evidence on which the Board relies, the direct testimony is overwhelming, either that the circumstances were not as the Board finds them, or that they were not attributable to respondent; and in any event, that they were not coercive; and hence, that even the "circumstantial" evidence does not support the Board's findings and order.

In the absence of "direct" coercion (and faced with the universal testimony of the employees themselves that there was no coercion), the Board seeks by evidence of isolated, miscellaneous incidents and circumstances to discover a basis for finding respondent guilty, notwithstanding respondent's clear and complete exculpation by the very persons concerned, namely the employees—whose right to choose their own union the Labor Board should seek to uphold instead of to destroy.

The "circumstances" on which the Board relies wholly fail to measure up to the standard of "substantial" evidence, as enunciated by the Courts, being founded on "a hodge podge of suspicious, farfetched inferences and pure guesses" as the Court described the evidence in NLRB v. International Shoe Co., 116 F. 2d l. c. 37, on which the Board made similar findings.

We now discuss the various "circumstances" in detail:

B-1.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to the March 18th Meeting and As to Mrs. Reed's Remarks at Said Meeting, Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

On March 18, 1937, the employees, of their own volition, called a meeting of the employees, to see what they could do to protect themselves against threatened violence such as was being visited by the ILGWU upon employees of other garment plants in Kansas City. (II, 553). The meeting was held after working hours, on property not leased or occupied by respondent (II, 553, 559; X, 3867, footnote 34).

The Board finds that the March 18th meeting of employees was held "during working hours" (and makes the same finding as to the organization meeting of the DGWU held on April 27th, R. X, 3867, note 33).

We take up this finding first because we wish to discuss this finding in extenso because similar considerations apply to most of the other findings made by the Trial Examiner and Board throughout the decision.

This finding (and the similar finding as to the April 27th meeting) is contrary to the overwhelming testimony in the case. All of respondent's and intervener's witnesses who testified on the subject, testified that the meeting was held after working hours, and respondent and intervener offered to prove, by the testimony of the remaining 1100-odd employees who attended the meeting, that it was held after working hours (Exhibit 1-OOOO, III, 759).

The employees whom the respondent was permitted to call, testified that the meeting of March 18th was held after working hours:

> "A. Well, it was after working hours. I don't remember just what time the working hours were. It was after 4:00 or 5:00, any way, I know, it was after we quit work" (Oma Lee Cooper, VIII, 2569).
>
> "It was after I finished work; and I was working then—got off at 4:30, and it was after I finished work, but I went down before I dressed" (Louise Garrett, VII, 3124).

To the same effect:

Hazel Saucke, VIII, 2627; Edith Dean, 2854, Jessie Mudd, 2920; Ethel Riegel, IX; 3009; Lydia Phillips, 3081; Alice Freed, 3189.

Also, highly significant is the fact that in the first Intermediate Report of the Trial Examiner (A, 510 et seq.) and in the first decision of the Board (A, 552, et seq.), they did not find that either of the meetings of March 18th and

April 27th was held during working hours—but the Trial Examiner affirmatively found (A, 526): "The April 27th meeting was called immediately after work * * *."

Now, the Trial Examiner and Board find that both meetings were held "during working hours"—and this in the face of the testimony and proffered testimony to the contrary of 1200-odd employees who were there.

Opposed to this overwhelming proof, is the testimony of the Board's five or six witnesses that the meeting was held about 2:00 to 3:00 in the afternoon.

We are cognizant of the rule that "the credibility of witnesses and the weight of the evidence" are for the Board, not the courts. But we do not understand that rule to mean that the Board may "arbitrarily" ignore the positive testimony of a thousand witnesses and accept that of a half dozen, when there is no basis for a conclusion that the thousand witnesses are giving perjured testimony. Such a rule would make the entire administration of the Labor Relations Act a mere farce—for there would always be some witness which the complaining union could scrape up, who would testify to some fact from which the Board would make a finding of guilt, unless some effect is given to the contrary evidence. The courts have recognized this and have not left the Board entirely unbridled in this respect:

(1) The courts have ruled that the evidence on which the Board bases its findings, must be so "substantial" that "a reasonable mind" might accept it as "adequate" (NLRB v. Columbian E. & S. Co., 306 U. S. 292, l. c. 300).

What reasonable mind could believe that a meeting of employees took place during working hours, if 1,200 persons who attended the meeting say that it occurred after working hours and five or six say that they think it was during working hours?

It seems absurd to think that Respondent, if it were secretly promoting the plant union, would have been so bungling as to permit meetings for that purpose to be held during working hours (see quotation from NLRB v. Mathiesen Alkali Works, 114 F. 2d 796, 803, quoted infra).

Courts are entitled to "weigh" the evidence to the extent of determining whether the evidence which the Board relies upon is "substantial" (Wilson & Co. v. NLRB, 126 F. 2d 114, 116; NLRB v. Reeves Rubber Co., 153 F. 2d 340, 342). Otherwise, a court could never say the Board's findings were not supported by the evidence. And whether or not the evidence the Board relies upon is substantial, depends on what the countervailing evidence is.

(2) The Board may not completely disregard material evidence in arriving at its findings.

It is conceivable that there might be evidence sufficient to support a finding by the Board, in the absence of any contrary evidence. But it is also obvious that the same evidence might not support a finding by the Board where there was countervailing evidence of such a nature as to negative or overwhelm the Board's evidence. Therefore, it necessarily follows that the Board is not entitled to ignore the countervailing evidence in making its findings (Indiana and Michigan case, supra).

In NLRB v. Laister-Kauffmann Aircraft Corp., (C. C. A. 8) 144 F. 2d 9, the court said:

> "It is undoubtedly true that a Board which with 'studied design' ignores all the evidence adduced by the employer and views as truthful only the testimony of adverse witnesses, acts arbitrarily and not in accord with legal requirements. NLRB v. Sartorious Co., 2 Cir., 140 F. 2d 203, 205; NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, Inc., 9 Cir., 99 F. 2d 153, 177; NLRB v. Greider Machine Tool & Die Co., 6 Cir., 142 F. 2d 163, 165, 'Testimony is the raw material out of which we construct truth and, unless all of it is weighed in its totality, errors will result and great injustices be wrought.' NLRB v. Thompson Products, Inc., 6 Cir., 97 F. 2d 13, 15. And Section 10 (e) of the Act, 49 Stat. 453, 29 U. S. C. A., Sec. 160 (e), which provides that 'The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive,' does not, of course compel the courts to accept findings reached by accepting evidence presented by one side to the controversy with total disregard for other worthy evidence before the Board. NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, supra."

If ever there was a case of "studied design" to ignore a company's evidence and find against it at all events, it is here.

No other conclusion can be reached in the case at bar, except that the Board has simply ignored petitioner's and intervener's testimony. To disregard evidence of a fact which 1,200 persons say is true, is equivalent to refusing to receive that evidence altogether.

Nor can the Board call this an isolated instance in which respondent's evidence has been ignored. It disregards the respondent's evidence throughout the decision. For example, although respondent at the first hearing, proved by all the witnesses which the Trial Examiner would let testify, and offered to make similar proof by its other employee witnesses (III, 760), that they attended a meeting of the employees on March 30th, at which money was collected to take care of Mr. Tyler's fee, and there was no testimony to the contrary, yet the Trial Examiner makes the amazing finding (which the Board dittos) that "there was no such meeting" (X, 3873, footnote 42).

Also, although the Board's witness, Rose Todd, and all respondent's and intervener's witnesses testified that the meeting of March 18th and April 27th were not Loyalty League meetings, and that there was no connection between the Loyalty League and the DGWU, and even though there was no direct testimony to the contrary, the Trial Examiner wholly disregarded this evidence and finds that the March 18th and April 27th meetings were "Loyalty League" meetings (X, 3867, 3886).

The same is true concerning the testimony as to the "supervisory status" of Rose Todd and other employees—although all the respondent's witnesses testified to the non-supervisory nature of Miss Todd's duties and that they did not consider her as "representing the management," yet the Trial Examiner totally disregarded this evidence, and the testimony of Mrs. Reed, Mr. Baty and Mrs. Reeves, that Rose Todd had no supervisory position, and finds that her duties were of a supervisory nature, and that she was "acting for" the management (X, 3858). The Board likewise totally disregarded similar overwhelming testimony of respondent's witnesses that they did not regard the instructors and thread girls as supervisory employees (See record citations pp. 158, infra).

Likewise, the Board absolutely refused to credit Mrs. Reed's, Mrs. Reeves's and Mr. Baty's testimony (VII, 2121-2124; II, 425, IV, 1173; II, 450), corroborated by the general testimony of the employees (VIII, 2846, 2862, 2864), that in June, 1935, a change was made in the factory whereby all authority over the operators was taken away from the instructors and vested in Mr. Baty—and the Board makes the further extraordinary finding that even if such change was made, the operators had no notice of it although working for two years under Mr. Baty! (X, 3853.)

In fact, there is scarcely an item of testimony of any consequence introduced by respondent or intervenor which the Trial Examiner and Board accept, irrespective of how meager or unreliable the opposing evidence is.

All of this shows a "studied design," both by the Trial Examiner and by the Board, to ignore respondent's evidence and convict respondent at all events.

Also, it is shown by the additional arbitrary findings made by the Trial Examiner and Board in the first hearing, many of which have been abandoned in the present decision, because of the vigorous attacks made upon them in our brief in the court below on the former appeal.

All of these findings, as well as many other adverse findings, are explainable in only one way—that the Trial Examiner and Board were determined to find respondent guilty at all events and to totally disregard respondent's evidence if necessary to achieve that result, and therefore clearly come within the holding of the court in the Laister-Kauffmann case, supra, and should be set aside.

(3) The Board may not "arbitrarily" make findings against a respondent (Laister-Kauffmann case, supra).

While the "weight" of the evidence is for the Board, yet the burden of proof is on the Board to prove its case by substantial evidence (American Smelting & Ref. Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 8) 126 F. 2d 680, 686; Interlake Iron Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 7) 131 F. 2d 129; NLRB v. West Kentucky Coal Co., 152 F. 2d 198, 202); and to fairly evaluate the evidence.

If it is obvious that the Board has not proved its case (or a particular fact), by a fair preponderance of the evidence, but the Board, nevertheless, makes findings contrary to the overwhelming evidence, it shows that the Board has not fairly evaluated the evidence, and such findings can only be denominated as "arbitrary and capricious." That occurs so repeatedly in the case at bar as to leave no doubt that the Trial Examiner and Board have made their findings with the "studied design" of convicting petitioner irrespective of the evidence.

We submit that the Trial Examiner's reasons given in footnote 33 (X, 3867) for his finding that the meeting of March 18th was held during working hours, show the arbitrary and capricious nature of the finding—especially so as he includes in the same category the organization meeting of April 27th, as to which the evidence is even more overwhelming that it was held after working hours.

The alleged reasons given in footnote 33 for the finding, show the utter lack of good faith of the Trial Examiner and Board. The Trial Examiner first says that the respondent's testimony is "contrary to the weight of the evidence"—(But can it be reasonably said that the Board's six witnesses outweigh 1,200?); he then refers to the "indefinite and routine" testimony of respondent's witnesses and to their "lack of knowledge of details"—(But how could their testimony be more "definite" than the positive statements of the witnesses that the meeting was held after working hours and usually specifying the hour as 4:30 or 5:00 o'clock? And how could such testimony be anything but "routine"? And how is testimony of the Board's witnesses that the meeting occurred at 2:00 or 3:00 o'clock, any less "indefinite" or any less "routine"? Also what "lack of knowledge of details" is involved in testifying as to whether a meeting occurred after working hours—it either did or it didn't). The Trial Examiner then says that the Board's witnesses were "mutually corroborative" —(But weren't the respondent's witnesses also mutually corroborative when they all testify that the meeting was after working hours?); then he says that the Board's testimony is supported by the testimony that "the operators attended the meetings in their uniforms"—(But this was explained by the witnesses who said that some of the employees (who got off work early) would change to their street clothes before going to the meetings and others who got off later would attend in their uniforms and then go to their lockers and change to their street clothes, VIII, 2818, 2873).

And lastly, the Trial Examiner gives as a reason for finding that the meeting was during working hours, that "no definite time was given in the call for the meetings" (But obviously that is a reason for reaching the opposite conclusion—if the meeting was to be held during working hours it would be necessary to fix a time, otherwise the employees would not know when to leave their work to go to the meeting. but if the meeting was to be held "after work," that was all the designation necessary).

We respectfully submit that none of the reasons given in footnote 33 constitutes a valid reason for disregarding the overwhelming direct testimony of the 1,200 employees, that the March 18th and April 27th meetings were held after working hours, but that the reasons enumerated are so unconvincing as to show the "studied design" of the Trial Examiner and Board to ignore respondent's evidence, and this, and other similar findings, should not be permitted to stand (Laister-Kauffmann Case, Supra).

Real Purpcse of March 18th Meeting.

Why was the March 18th meeting called by the employees? It was at this time that the ILGWU and its agents were brutally assaulting with clubs and other deadly weapons girls and women employed at the Gernes, Gordon and Missouri garment plants located within a few blocks of respondent's plant. The ILGWU's agents were threatening to attack the Donnelly employees next, subject them to worse brutality (IV, 1225, 1228). The employees not only knew that they were liable at any moment to be pounced upon by strong-arm gangs of lawless racketeers but that their jobs would be lost if the plant was closed. They called a meeting to discuss these matters and during the meeting decided to call Mrs. Reed to see what the company would do to afford them protection (I, 144). Was there anything wrong about that? It was an appeal by these decent girls and women to their employer for help. Under the circumstances what was the moral if not the legal duty of the employer? Certainly it was to protect said employees in any way it reasonably could. In addition, an employer would have a direct interest to protect his employees in order to avoid the closing of his plant. Indeed under the old common law the employer had the right to defend his employee even to the point of death. If an employee comes to his employer and asks for protection against criminal assaults, is any court or any tribunal, outside of the Labor Board, ever going to say that the employer is guilty of a coercive act, when in response to such appeal he promises that he will do what he can to protect him?

The undisputed evidence shows that the employees asked Mrs. Reed to come to this meeting (I, 45) and tell them what the company would do to afford them protection. She made a few short remarks. We quote verbatim the portions thereof material to the issues herein:

> "I know you are thinking about the threats of violence that the Union is making against you and the company. I want to say that the Company and I intend to do everything possible to protect you in case of any violence. We are now trying to make arrangements with the street car company for its busses to go to certain points and pick you people up and bring you to the plant. We will let you know about this as soon as arrangements can be made.

"Many of you have been here for a number of years and you know that you have never been asked whether or not you belong to a union. The company has not discriminated against anyone on that account and Mr. Dubinsky is not going to make me discriminate against employees because they would not belong to his Union. If you want to belong that is your own business and it is up to you to decide. I will say that neither Dubinsky or any other buttinsky is going to intimidate me or the Company into forcing you to join the International Union against your will.

"I can't say at this time what will be done to protect you against violence, but the company's attorneys will consider what legal steps might be advisable. In any event, you can understand that the company will not submit to any unlawful attacks lying down" (III, 1030).

The Board accepts the stenographic record of Mrs. Reed's talk and holds that it constitutes coercion (X, 3868). But that the Board really recognizes the obvious natural meaning and interpretation of Mrs. Reed's remarks to be that the employees were free to exercise their rights as to union membership is shown by its statement (X, 3869) that "Mrs. Reed sought to appear as a disinterested defender of the respondent's employees in the exercise of their right to join or not join a labor organization." If the Trial Examiner and Board deem that Mrs. Reed, by her talk, was seeking to convey to the employees that they were free to join or not join a labor organization, is it not logical to conclude that the employees also got that impression from her talk?

The testimony of the employees shows that they did so understand Mrs. Reed's remarks (II, 554, 611, 640a; III, 758-9).

It will be noted that Mrs. Reed stated the company was trying to make arrangements for busses to bring the employees to work. Busses were immediately thereafter arranged for and did bring the employees to and from work for a long period of time at the company's expense (VII, 2085). The Board charged in its original complaint that this was an act of unfair labor practice, then it amended its complaint omitting the charge with reference to the said busses, recognizing the absurdity of claiming that it was an unfair labor practice for respondent to give this protection to its employees. The only other protection that these employees have ever had was given by a United States Federal Court which enjoined the ILGWU from committing any acts of violence against respondent or its employees.

The Board from the innocent and commendatory remarks of Mrs. Reed draws the conclusion that they were coercive, demonstrating the complete bias and prejudice on the part of the Board against respondent. The Board attempts to support its conclusion by unwarranted inferences. For example, the Board states:

> "Mrs. Reed painted the ILGWU as the common enemy of both the respondent and its employees."

This is a plain distortion. Mrs. Reed did not say that the ILGWU was the "common enemy of both the respondent and its employees." This is a made up phrase of the Board. If, however, she had referred to them as a "common enemy" she would have said nothing which was not already within the knowledge of every employee. They knew that the ILGWU and Dubinsky proposed to assault their persons and destroy the business of respondent. She did not go into a discussion of what had happened at other plants, but merely said:

> "I want to say that the Company and I intend to do everything possible to protect you in case of any violence."

She simply assured these frightened women that the company would do what it could to protect them. She further said that she was not going to be forced by Mr. Dubinsky to force her employees to join a union against their will. She did not say anything even intimating that the employees should not join the ILGWU if they wanted to. Her statement was not an unfair or coercive statement. If the Trial Examiner had permitted respondent to show what was going on at other garment factories, it would have shown that other employers in the garment industry in Kansas City were being forced by the ILGWU to force their employees against their wills to join the ILGWU (exactly contrary to the NLR Act) and Mrs. Reed was merely telling her employees that they could do as they pleased and she was not going to be forced into forcing them to do anything they did not want to do. Instead of constituting "coercion" this was letting them know that they could do as they pleased about a union. She made it plain that "if you want to belong that is your own business and it is up to you to decide." And she also made it plain that the company had never discriminated against anyone because of their union membership and that it would not do so now. What plainer statement could be made of a neutral attitude as to unionism? Mrs. Reed's remarks can only fairly be interpreted to mean that she was going to comply with the letter and spirit of the law and that the ILGWU and Dubinsky were not going to make her violate the law. We submit that Mrs. Reed's remarks were not coercive and therefore did not constitute any violation of the Act.

There was no mention made of a "plant" union by Mrs. Reed, or anyone else at the March 18th meeting.

In fact, no thought of a plant union occurred until after April 12th (I, 64; II, 577).

However, the preference of Mrs. Reed—or respondent, for one union or another, or for no union, does not constitute an unfair labor practice, unless such preference is made coercive (which was not the case here).

Texas & N. O. R. R. Co. v. Brotherhood of Ry. and S. S. Clerks, 281 U. S. 548, 568.

Midland Steel Products Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 6) 113 F. 2d 800, l. c. 804:

"The finding of the Board that the comment of the general superintendent that the men in petitioner's Detroit plant were 'disgusted with unionism' constituted evidence of interference, restraint and coercion, raises the question whether any and all statements derogatory to unions are prohibited by the Act. It is not claimed that the comment was coupled with any threat of discrimination or loss of employment. It did not interfere with or restrain attempts to organize, nor did it attempt to do so. The comment may have been either a statement of fact or an expression of opinion, or a statement embodying both elements. * * * The use of influence amounting to interference, restraint or coercion plainly is illegal. Cf. Texas & New Orleans Rd. Co. v. Brotherhood of Railway & Steamship Clerks, supra. But where no such element exists the employer is not precluded from conversing with employees about labor questions."

L. Greif & Bro. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 4) 108 F. 2d 551 (l .c. 557-8):

"The real query is whether the management has interfered or taken part in the formation of the new body. It is not an answer to point to circumstances indicating that the management preferred an inside to an outside union, or that citizens in the community entertained a hostile feeling toward the Amalgamated It goes without saying that the determination of the employees to form their own association and to be free from the outside interference of a national union was influenced by their past experience in the plant, and by the general opinion in the community of which they are a part; but these contracts did not deprive them of their rights under the Act, or require them to choose bargaining representatives offensive to their employer or to their fellow citizens, so long as their choice was not dominated or interfered with by the employer."

As was said in Humble Oil & Refining Co. case, supra, l. c. 88:

"If employer interference has been slight, and not coercive or oppressive, suppression of a major organization whose members are not complaining of interference would be an extreme step."

Mrs. Reed's talk contained nothing coercive, and was not in a setting of coerciveness, hence it does not support the Board's findings, under either of the Virginia Electric cases by this court (NLRB v. Virginia Elec. & P. Co., 314 U. S. 469; Virginia Elec. & P. Co. v. NLRB, 319 U. S. 533), and her remarks were clearly within the constitutional right of free speech, under the rulings in both of those cases, and in many recent decisions by the Circuit Courts of Appeals (NLRB v. American Tube Bending Co., (C. C. A. 2) 134 F. 2d 993; Budd Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 3) 142 F. 2d 922; Jacksonville Paper Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 5) 137 F. 2d 148; NLRB v. Brandeis & Sons, (C. C. A. 8) 145 F. 2d 556, l. c. 564, and cases there cited.

Other Findings of the Board Re March 18th Meeting.

The Board finds that the meeting was sponsored by the respondent, and that its instructors notified the operators that "they were to attend" the meeting (X, 3867).

Respondent's witnesses who testified, and the 1100-odd employees whose testimony was refused by the Trial Examiner as cumulative, testify to the contrary.

"Q. State whether or not that meeting, so far as you know, was called by the employees on their own initative.

A. As far as I know, it was.

Q. Do you know of any action, influence or suggestion of the employer or of any representative of the employer in connection with the calling of that meeting?

A. I don't know of any" (Lois Barnes, VIII, 2815).

To the same general effect:

Hazel Saucke, VIII, 2627-8; Lois Barnes, 2774; Edith Dean, 2851; Jessie Mudd, 2921; Ethel Riegel, IX, 3007; Lydia Phillips, 3081; Louise Garrett, 3124-5; Alice Freed, 3189.

"Q. Did any instructor suggest or direct that you attend any of these meetings?

A. No" (Alice Freed, IX, 3195).

To the same effect:

Hazel Saucke, VIII, 2643; Lois Barnes 2779; Edith Dean, 2873; Jessie Mudd, 2917; Oma Lee Cooper, 2571-2; Ruby Clayton, IX, 3046; Lydia Phillips, 3078; Louise Garrett, 3122; Ethel Riegel, 3020.

The Board makes the finding that "most all the supervisory force" were in attendance at the March 18th meeting (X, 3867). By this the Trial Examiner probably refers to the instructors, thread girls, Rose Todd and the other individuals which he finds to be supervisory employees, but which respondent contends were not supervisory employees. The Trial Examiner names only two employees entitled to be classified as supervisory—Mrs. Hyde and Mrs. Reeves. But Mrs. Reeves was in New York at the time of this meeting and obviously was not present (II, 404), and Mrs. Hyde's testimony shows that she only learned of the meeting by chance and arrived only for the last part of the meeting (II, 535). Obviously, her casual presence under these circumstances cannot characterize the meeting as one "sponsored" by the company.

The Board also finds that the March 18th meeting was sponsored by the Loyalty League (X, 3868). There is not a scintilla of testimony that this was a meeting of the Loyalty League. In fact, one of the Board's principal witnesses, Elsa Graham Greenhaw, testified that she was not a member of the Loyalty League, but that she had attended this meeting and that it was a meeting of employees (I, 354a, 365).

Had it been a Loyalty League meeting or had she thought it was, she certainly would have so testified for her testimony shows that she had a personal grudge against the Donnelly Company.

Nor did the Board's other principal witness at the first trial, May Fike, nor any of the Board's witnesses at the second hearing, say that it was a Loyalty League meeting.

On the other hand, all of respondent's and intervener's witnesses testified positively that it was not a Loyalty League meeting (see record citations p. 192, infra).

But this overwhelming proof means nothing to this Trial Examiner and the Board—they find it to be a Loyalty League meeting anyway.

We respectfully submit that the Board's findings and conclusions with reference to the March 18th meeting and as to Mrs. Reed's remarks, are unsupported by the evidence, are contrary to the law, and should be set aside.

The Board's Argument.

The Board opens its argument on this point (p. 44) with a clear misstatement, to wit, that "Mrs. Reed had the letter read to a mass meeting of all the employees on March 18th," and again on page 45 that she "brought the letter from the ILGWU with her."

Not one of the record references given supports either of these statements (except, of course, the Trial Examiner's findings). At I, 48-49 the witness Rose Todd says she "thinks that there was a letter read" but she says she "don't remember Mrs. Reed reading anything" or that Mrs. Reed had it read. At I, 147-148, although the Board's counsel tries to put the answer into the witness' mouth that Mrs. Reed read the letter, the witness merely says "That is the meeting when the letter was read." At I, 310, the Board's own hostile witness, May Fike, says "Mrs. Reed read the letter," but immediately follows this by saying "She cried over the letter, and was grateful for the loyalty of the girls for standing by her," clearly showing that May Fike was referring to the "March 2d statement," not the March 9th letter. At I, 354b-354c, the Board's other hostile witness, Elsa Graham Greenhaw, does not say that Mrs. Reed "had" the letter read, but in fact is very hazy about the whole matter. At II, 588, there is nothing said about the letter; and at VIII, 2620, the witness says "Mrs. Reed didn't read the letter" but that "one of the girls read part of one of the pamphlets that the girls had handed her out in front of the building" (meaning pamphlets distributed by the ILGWU).

The Board's attempt to charge Mrs. Reed with introducing this letter into the March 18th meeting is wholly unwarranted. The undisputed evidence is that the ILGWU, just prior to the March 18th meeting, had distributed to the Donnelly employees in front of the building a pamphlet containing a copy of the March 9th letter (VIII, 2725). Therefore, it was not a matter of Mrs. Reed having the only copy of the letter and being the only one who could bring it to the meeting—the ILGWU wanted the Donnelly company employees to see this letter and the employees had many copies of it (VIII, 2725). A copy of the pamphlet was introduced in evidence (VIII, 2726) and appears at XI, 4181-83. The Board's contention that Mrs. Reed brought the letter to the meeting, or had it read at the meeting, is not only not supported by the evidence but is wholly misleading.

At none of these places is there any statement that Mrs. Reed brought the letter to the meeting or that she had it read.

The Board does not cite reference to Mrs. Reed's testimony on this subject (VII, 2089) where she says positively that she did not read the letter and that it was not read in her presence and that she heard or knew nothing about it.

We submit that this finding is a typical example of the farfetched findings on which the Board's order is based.

At page 45 the Board says, "The meeting was attended by most of the Company's supervisory force." This is either a complete misstatement or is based on the "assumption" that Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton, the instructors, thread girls, etc., are supervisory employees, Respondent contending that they are not. None of the management was at the meeting, except that Mrs. Hyde testified that she only learned of the meeting by chance and arrived only for the last part of it (II, 535). Her presence "on this record was innocuous," as said in NLRB v. Clinton Woolen Mfg. Co., 141 F. 2d l. c. 757.

At I, 309-310, May Fike testifies that Mrs. Reeves was there and she thinks Mr. Baty was. Mrs. Reeves was in New York at the time (II, 404) (which shows, incidentally, the looseness with which May Fike testified—even the Trial Examiner finding her testimony not credible as to another matter X, 3891). Mr. Baty testified he was not at the meeting (II, 442a).

The rest of the Board's argument in regard to the March 18th meeting has been fully answered above and we do not here repeat except to call attention again that the Board bases its findings on the testimony of three or four witnesses, against 1,200, which to our minds is not "substantial" evidence "from which the fact in issue can be reasonably inferred" (Washington, Va. & Md. Coach Co. v. NLRB, 301 U. S. 142) or such evidence "as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion" (Consolidated Edison Co. v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 197, 229).

B-2.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to "Supervisory" Employees Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The Board finds that the following employees were supervisory employees (X, 3850-59):

Rose Todd	Mrs. Gray
Hobart Atherton	Mrs. Strickland
Mrs. Tyhurst	Ortense Root
Marvin Price	Heath Cowan
Ted Scoles	The Instructors
Mrs. Bogart	The Thread Girls

Primarily, it finds Rose Todd, Hobart Atherton, the instructors and thread girls to be supervisory employees (X, 3850-3859). Upon its findings that these were "supervisory" employees, the Board bases many of its findings against respondent. We submit that the Board's findings and conclusions with respect to these employees are contrary to the evidence and to the law.

Before discussing the status of the individual employees whom the Board finds were "supervisory" employees and were "representing the management," we desire to discuss briefly the general subject of supervisory employees and the rules applicable thereto in cases of this kind.

(1) Re Supervisory Employees Generally.

There is not a scintilla of evidence that any one of the above mentioned employees possessed any authority to hire, discipline or discharge other employees or occupied any position with authority to give orders to other employees. Nor is there any evidence that any of the said employees were held out by petitioner as possessing authority to speak for the management with respect to labor union activities. Nor is there any substantial evidence that the employees thought, or had reason to believe, that any of the aforesaid employees were acting for the management in what they said or did with respect to the formation of the DGWU or other labor union matters, but the evidence is overwhelming to the contrary.

CASE AT BAR IS NOT WITHIN THE HOLDINGS OF THE INTERNATIONAL MACHINISTS AND SIMILAR CASES.

We wish to meet head-on the contention that these employees and their activities bring them within the holdings in the cases of International Association et al. v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 72; H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB, 311 U. S. 514; NLRB v. Link-Belt Co., 311 U. S. 584, which cases appear to be the ones primarily relied upon by the Board.

In the International Machinists case, the fact situation is vastly different from that in the case at bar. We quote rather fully from the Court's opinion in that case, which clearly shows that the court was dealing with a situation wholly different from the fact situation here. The court said (l. c. 76-77):

> "The general manager told Shock that he would close the plant rather than deal with UAW. The superintendent and Shock reported to toolroom employees that the employer would not recognize the CIO. The superintendent let it be known that the employer would deal with an A. F. of L. union. At the same time the superintendent also stated to one of the employees that some of the 'foremen don't like the CIO' and added, with prophetic vision, that there was going to be quite a layoff around here and these fellows that don't like the CIO are going to lay those fellows off first.' * * *
>
> "Byroad spent considerable time during working hours soliciting employees, threatening loss of employment to those who did not sign up with petitioner and representing that he was acting in line with the desires of the toolroom foreman, McCoy. This active solicitation for petitioner was on company time and was made openly in the shop. Much of it was made in the presence of the toolroom foreman, McCoy, who clearly knew what was being done. * * *
>
> "Five UAW officials had been discharged in June, 1937, because of their union activities."

A brief review of these facts will show the great differences existing between the International Machinists case and the Donnelly case:

(a) In the International case there was direct coercive acts by high company officials (the general manager, superintendent, foreman) in favor of one union and against another. This evidence amply justified the Court's holding that the employer assisted petitioner in the International case in enrolling a majority of the employees.

But there is no such evidence in the case at bar. Here there is no evidence or finding by the Board of any such participation by Mr. Baty, production manager, or by Mrs. Reeves, merchandise manager, or by Mr. Keyes, sales manager, or by Mrs. Reed, president, who were the principal officials in touch with the employees in the Donnelly plant. (May Fike and Elsa Lou Greenhaw did testify that Mrs. Reed in a talk to the employees on March 18th, stated that she would close her factory before she would permit it to be unionized, but this testimony was contradicted by the stenographic copy of Mrs. Reed's talk and by all of respondent's witnesses, and was evidently so unworthy of belief that the Board states that it "does not consider it necessary to resolve the conflict in this testimony" (X, 3868), and makes no finding that Mrs. Reed made any such statement.) We respectfully submit that there is no showing in the Donnelly case of direct coercion such as is shown in the International case.

(b) In the International case "five UAW officials had been discharged in June, 1937, because of their union activities" (p. 77).

In the Donnelly case the Board found no discharges for union activities, although there were over 1,200 employees. The most that the Board and ILGWU could do in this regard was to charge that the company had discriminated against May Fike and Sylvia Hull and refused to reinstate them because of their affiliations with the ILGWU. However, the testimony of May Fike was so unworthy of belief that the Trial Examiner in his Intermediate Report states, "the undersigned does not credit this testimony of Fike" (X, 3891), and found that she was not discharged because of her affiliations with the ILGWU or denied reinstatement for that reason. The Trial Examiner did find that Sylvia Hull "was temporarily laid off by the respondent because of her membership in and activities on behalf of the ILGWU" (X, 3890) (which finding we show in Point B-11 was unjustified) but found that she was not entitled to reinstatement or any reimbursement for loss of pay. Out of the large turnover which occurs among 1,200 employees, the Board, assisted by the ILGWU's far-reaching acquaintance among employees in the garment industry, was able to find no discriminatory discharges of employees by respondent over a period of seven years, from 1935, to the date of the second trial in 1942 (The complaint originally charged discrimination against some 18 employees back in 1934-5, but these charges were dismissed or abandoned, A. 423, 506).

Obviously this situation is not comparable to the situation in the International Machinists case.

(c) In the International Machinists case, "on August 10, 1937, the UAW having a clear majority of all the employees, presented to the employer a proposed written contract for collective bargaining. This was refused" (l. c. 77). On August 11, 1937, the next day, the company signed a closed shop contract with petitioner.

How different from the Donnelly situation! Here the DGWU having not merely a "clear majority" but an "Ivory Soap" 99 44/100% majority of the employees, sought a collective bargaining contract with petitioner on April 28th—and partial contract was not made until May 27th, and supplemental contract as to wages was not made until June 22nd (III. 807, 812).

(d) In the Donnelly case there was no "acquiescence in the drive for membership and close surveillance of the competitor" (as in the Machinists case, l. c. 78), as the DGWU was formed at one meeting and there was no drive by any competitive union.

In the Donnelly case the DGWU members were not closely identified with a company-dominated union, until "their quick shift" to petitioner, as in the International case (l. c. 79), as there was no predecessor union in the Donnelly plant. The Board, faced with the necessity of overcoming that fact, seeks to substitute as a "predecessor union" a social organization among the employees known as the Loyalty League, but all the employees testified that the Loyalty League was purely a social organization and performed none of the functions of a labor union, and that it had no connection whatever with the DGWU, but was wholly distinct and separate therefrom. This is discussed more fully under Point B-3 of this brief.

In the Donnelly case there was no "ready acceptance of the DGWU contract and contemporaneous rejection of contract tendered by competitive union" as in the International case (l. c. 79), as we have just pointed out under (c) above.

The Board here charges "hostility" by respondent toward the ILGWU, but such hostility, if any, as respondent had toward the ILGWU, was not manifested in any interference with or opposition to the employees' choice of a labor union, but was confined to court litigation in which respondent sought to save its business from unlawful attacks by the ILGWU. Surely, a company has a right to defend the very existence of its business in the courts against a labor union, which is conducting an unlawful attack against such company, without such action by the company being held, ipso facto, to constitute coercion of its employees under the NLR Act. Yet that is what the Board's findings as to hostility amount to. There is no substantial testimony that the company discriminated against its employees because of their affiliations with the ILGWU. The amended complaint charged such discrimination against 18 named employees (alleged to have occurred away back in 1934-35, A, 423), but the charges as to all of these persons were either dismissed by the Board or Trial Examiner (A, 506). The sole finding of discrimination is as to Sylvia Hull (and even as to her, the Board finds that after leaving petitioner's employ, she never sought to come back, that respondent in good faith sought to call her back and that she was not entitled to any "loss of pay" or reinstatement, X, 3889-90). Surely, this state of the record falls far short of showing discrimination or any hostility affecting the rights of employees to join the ILGWU or any union they might want to join. In contradistinction, in the International case, the hostility of the employer was directly used in the union drive for membership—the company, in the words of the Court, "evincing great hostility to the UAW in a contest to enlist its production force" (l. c. 75).

In our limited space we shall not attempt to point out further differences between the International Machinist case and the Donnelly case—obviously, the two pictures are entirely different and the holding in the International case is not authority for a similar holding here.

In H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB, supra, the facts and circumstances were also quite different from those in the Donnelly case, as disclosed by the following quotation from the court's opinion (l. c. 517, 518, 519):

> "The Board found that during April and May, 1937, the two rival labor organizations, the Association and the Union, sought to organize petitioner's employees at its Pittsburgh plant. * * *
>
> "Petitioner does not deny that there is evidence supporting the findings that petitioner's superintendent, during the organization campaign, upbraided employees for attending Union meetings, threatened one with discharge if he joined the Union, spoke to them disparagingly of the Union and directed some of petitioner's foremen to enroll the employees in the Association; or that there was evidence supporting the finding that a general foreman working throughout petitioner's Pittsburgh plant was active in disparaging the Union and its members to employees, and in urging them to repudiate the Union organization, or that three other foremen in charge of particular buildings or departments were active in dissuading employees from joining the Union. All three spoke disparagingly of the Union, one at a meeting of employees which he had called; and two were active in questioning employees concerning their labor union sympathies. Two of them threatened employees with discharge or loss of work or privileges if the Union were recognized.

"There was also evidence that other foremen or forewomen in charge of large groups of employees engaged in similar activities; * * *

"Petitioner does not seriously dispute this evidence or challenge the findings of the Board summarizing it."

We will not attempt to point out in detail the great differences between the Heinz case and the Donnelly case, as we did in the International Machinists case, supra, but such differences are very apparent. For example, in the Heinz case there were two rival labor organizations conducting an active drive for members among the employees; this was not the case in the Donnelly plant. Also, from the quotation it appears beyond question (and was not even questioned by the Heinz Co.) that high officials of the company (the superintendent, general foreman, and other foremen and forewomen) actively participated in the organization of the Association, which is far different from the situation in the Donnelly case.

In NLRB v. Link-Belt Co., supra, the fact situation was also far different from that in the Donnelly case. In describing the conditions, the Court said (l. c. 586-598):

"From 1933 down to that date the employer, Link-Belt Co., had maintained a company union, apparently continuing to recognize it even after passage of the Act in 1935 and even though under the Act it was concededly an improper bargaining unit. In any event, that union remained in existence until Independent's membership drive was successfully concluded. * * *

"In September, 1936, Salmons, an employee of 14 years' standing, who was an employee representative in the company union and who became dissatisfied with it, initiated the formation of Amalgamated, an 'outside' organization. Amalgamated held its first organizing meeting on September 20, 1936. Salmons was discharged the next day by plant manager Berry for 'spreading union propaganda around here.' * * *

"On September 21, 1936, another employee, Novak, who had been employed by the company for over 11 years, was also discharged without warning by Berry, who believed, mistakenly it would seem, that Novak was a member of and solicitor for Amalgamated. Berry gave him half an hour to get out, after charging him with being 'an organizer and instigator for a union'—a charge which Novak denied. * * *

"Beyond that is the active support of Independent by some of the supervisory staff. There is abundant testimony that Siskauskis, a foreman, actively solicited for Independent. * * *

"There was considerable testimony, not denied, that Belov, a night boss, also solicited for Independent. According to one employee, Kalamarie, Belov did so on written instructions left by foreman McKinney which Kalamarie read. Kalamarie testified as follows respecting this conversation with Belov about those instructions: * * *

"Thomas, an employee, testified that his boss, Big Louie, 'a kind of assistant foreman' solicited for Independent getting about ten signatures; that Big Louie told him that 'they were trying to get the CIO out of there.'" * * *

From the foregoing quotation, the differences between the Link-Belt Co. case and the Donnelly case are apparent and we will not take time to point them out in detail. In the first place, there was a "company union" in the Link-Belt case, maintained by the company down to the time of the organization of the plant union, whereas, there was no previous union at the Donnelly plant. Also, in the Link-Belt case, employees (Salmons and Novak) were clearly discharged for activities on behalf of the outside union; foremen of the company, themselves, actively solicited and signed up members for the independent union; also, Olson, an assistant superintendent, told an employee that the employees would be better off if they formed their own union and "kept the outside union out."

This shows a decidedly different situation from that existing in the case at bar.

The court in the Link-Belt case held as follows (l. c. 588):

> "It would indeed be a rare case where the finders of fact would probe the precise factors of motivation which underlay each employee's choice. Normally, the conclusion that their choice was restrained by the employer's interference must of necessity be based on the existence of conditions or circumstances which the employer created or for which he was fairly responsible and as a result of which it may reasonably be inferred that the employees did not have that complete and unfettered freedom of choice which the Act contemplates."

We respectfully urge that the conditions and circumstances in the Donnelly case upon which the Board relies, were not conditions which the "employer created or for which he was fairly responsible," nor were they conditions "as a result of which it may be reasonably inferred" that the employees did not have the full freedom of choice which the act contemplates. In the Donnelly case, as distinguished from the Link-Belt case, there was an opportunity to "probe the precise factors of motivation which underlay the employees' choice." The respondent and intervener DGWU desired and offered to put on the witness stand virtually 100% of the employees concerned and obtain their own sworn testimony as to what factors motivated them in forming the DGWU (Ex. 1-OOOO, III, 743 et seq.; 1-RRRR, III, 764; 1-VVVVV, X, 3792-3; X, 3829-34; IX, 3290). All the employees whom the Trial Examiner permitted respondent or intervener DGWU to call as witnesses testified that the employees in forming the DGWU were motivated by their own desires and not by any coercion or interference on the part of respondent; and while the testimony of comparatively few employees was permitted to be given, yet we believe the fair and correct rule is that when a court or Trial Examiner stops the putting on of further witnesses on the ground that their testimony is cumulative, then the court or Trial Examiner, in determining the case, should assume that the testimony of all additional witnesses whose testimony is offered, will be substantially to the same effect as that given by the witnesses who were permitted to testify, concerning the subjects as to which they testified, as Judge Riddick held (XIII, 53). This is especially true here as there were offered in evidence the sworn statements (affidavits) of all the members of the DGWU (some 1,195), to the effect that the DGWU was their free choice (Intervener's Exhibit 20A to 20KK, VI, 1675), and the court does not have to rely on the offers of proof alone in concluding that the employees really felt that way about the matter. This means that, in the case at bar, the court does have "the precise factors of motivation which underlay each employee's choice." And those factors were that the employees wanted their own union and not an outside union (ILGWU), whose methods they knew were violent, whose dues were high, and whose headquarters were far away (II, 657-8; VIII, 2566, 3006).

The testimony of the employees themselves, shows most positively that the employees whom the Board finds to be "supervisory" employees, and to be "representatives of the management," were not considered as such by the employees (see record citations, pp. 158, 170-171, 176, infra); and that is the best proof that there was no coercion by the alleged supervisory employees, and is proof that under the test laid down in the International Machinist case, the findings of the Board as to domination of the employees through supervisory employees, are not supported by the evidence.

(2) The Instructors and Thread Girls Were Not "Supervisory" Employees.

The Trial Examiner finds the instructors and thread girls to be supervisory employees.

The evidence shows that in the set-up of the Donnelly factory, the work of the instructors and thread girls is as follows:

The factory operates in sections of up to 40 operators, different classes of work being done in different sections. Assigned to each section is an instructor and usually a thread girl. The prime duty of the instructor is to show the operators how to do the various sewing operations and to assist in keeping them supplied with sewing bundles (II, 391, 450-1; VII, 2120-1; 2123-4). Such other duties as she performs are incidental. She has nothing to do with the hiring, firing or disciplining of operators, or with their coming to work or any general control of them —she is not "over" them in any way. The factory has six lines of dresses each year—first spring, second spring, first summer, mid-summer, first fall and second fall (II, 390h). In each line, there are numerous different styles of dresses requiring many new or different sewing operations. The merchandise office furnishes written instructions on how to make the garments, but obviously operators would often have difficulty in following these instructions. The instructors show the operators how to perform these operations so that the dresses are made according to the plans (II, 391-2). This work requires constant aid and assistance to the operators on the numerous new styles in each of the six lines yearly. It is by that work that the status of an instructor is to be judged and we submit that neither her work nor position is such as puts her into the class of supervisory employees who represent the management in the sense used in labor cases but, on the contrary, shows that the instructors are employees entitled to the benefits of the National Labor Relations Act.

Analogously, there are inspectors in the Donnelly Plant who inspect the completed garments, and if they are not properly made send them back to the operators for correction (II, 392); but that does not mean that the inspector is "over" the operator, or "over" the instructor in the section where the garment was made; it merely means that the inspector has a certain type of work to do which has a relationship to the work of other persons in the plant. The management (not the instructors) has divided the work of making a dress up among different classes of workmen—designers, cutters, instructors, operators, inspectors, thread girls, etc. (II, 391). Each has a particular task to perform which has a relationship to the work of the others, but neither is a supervisory employee over the other, although one type of work may call for a higher degree of qualification and consequently for higher pay than the others.

The Trial Examiner holds Mr. Baty's testimony "incredible," that Mrs. Reed, in 1935, had taken away all supervisory authority from the instructors and given him complete supervision of the factory employees (X, 3851), although Mrs. Reed and Mrs. Reeves testified to the same effect, and this was corroborated by the testimony and offered testimony of the "1200 employees."

WORK OF OPERATORS IS PLANNED IN THE OFFICE.

The exercise by Mr. Baty of entire authority over the factory is not such an extraordinary or incredible task as the Trial Examiner seems to think. To understand the relationship between Mr. Baty and operators, it is necessary to know how carefully and completely the work of the factory is planned in the office. This is described by Mrs. Reeves (II, 390G-392). Complete patterns and written instructions are prepared showing how to make each style of dress. These instructions are furnished to the operators who work on the various styles; the bundles of dresses to be sewed are brought to the sewing sections by bundle boys and supplied to the operators by the thread girls and instructors, and the completed work is carried away. Except for showing the operators how to perform operations on new styles and handing them bundles of dresses to work on, there is practically no need for contact between the instructors and operators, nor between Mr. Baty and operators. The operators are anxious to do as much work as they can as their pay is on a piece work basis and they are desirous of doing it properly so that it will not come back to them for repair. Such complaints as do arise, such as adjustment of piece work prices, are readily handled by Mr. Baty, as he devotes his entire time to the factory, and he has a full-time assistant, Mrs. Hyde.

The Board's witness, Mrs. Skeens, testified (IX, 3453-4):

"Q. Wasn't work planned in the office upstairs?

A. Well, I think it was planned there, yes, what each section would do.

Q. Do you want to tell the Examiner that you had the authority to give out the work to certain people and refused to give work to other people?

A. Well, I didn't do anything like that.

Q. Well, you never thought that you had any right to do anything like that?

A. Well, no, I wouldn't think so. * * *

Q. Well, prior—now, I am speaking of prior to July, 1939—did you transfer operators out of your section without consulting Mr. Baty?

A. Why, I never did transfer any out unless somebody came and told me to transfer them out.

Q. Yes, and wasn't it Mr. Baty that did that?

A. No, it wasn't Mr. Baty.

Q. Wouldn't it come from Mr. Baty, the instructions.

A. Well, I imagine it would come from him but that wouldn't be the way I would receive it."

There you have an instructor (the Board's own witness) testifying that the instructors do not even have authority to give work to some operators and refuse it to others, or to transfer operators—(much less any authority to hire, fire, promote, demote or discipline). Mrs. Skeens also testified she never told an operator to join or not to join the DGWU (IX, 3460).

We respectfully submit that the mere fact that the Trial Examiner doesn't think the Donnelly set-up was a good one, doesn't support a finding that it didn't exist. Mrs. Reed testified (VII, 2122 —"whether it was a wise thing or the right thing, I did give him the whole authority * * *."

The instructor has no authority to hire, fire, or discipline operators, nor any general control over the operators (Mrs. Reeves, II, 411-12; Mr. Baty, II, 450-1, VII, 2120-2124). All of the employee witnesses whom respondent was permitted to call so testified; and as the Trial Examiner held further testimony would be cumulative, it should be assumed that the remainder of the 1,200 witnesses would have testified likewise. If the operator does not want to come to work, she is not responsible to the instructor or thread girl, nor is the instructor or thread girl responsible to her. That responsibility belongs to the office. If an operators fails to show up for work, it is no concern to the instructor. Her job is to instruct the operators whom the office provides. Mr. Baty testified: "* * * it was none of their concern how the girls performed" (See balance of quotation II, 450-1).

An instructor may tell an operator "how" to sew an operation—but that doesn't make the instructor a supervisor in the sense of being a "foreman" or "overseer." (A traffic clerk may tell other employees how to ship certain goods, but that doesn't make the traffic clerk an overseer over the shipping department or over the vice-president in charge of sales.) The Board makes the following findings as to the duties of instructors and thread girls (X, 3850-1):

> "Among the duties of the instructor and thread girl in each section is the distribution of materials and supplies with which the operators work. Instructors also distribute directions as to how the work is to be done and teach operators how to execute each step of the process. This much is undisputed. * * *

"Among the duties of the instructor is the assignment of bundles containing the materials and supplies upon which the operators work, and the transmission to the operators of the respondent's instructions for the performance of the sewing processes."

This statement of the instructors' duties, instead of showing that the instructors are supervisory employees, shows the contrary.

We have discussed the instructors' duties with regard to showing the operator "how" to perform their sewing operations. Naturally, the operators must have some work to sew. This is brought to the sections, in bundles, by the bundle boys. Most of the operators perform one or two particular operations (thereby becoming more skilled and able to make more money on the piece work basis). When the bundles come in, they are handed to the various operators who are doing the particular types of operations in those bundles (II, 392). The instructor sometimes performs this manual task of handing (the Board calls it "assigning") the bundles to the operators concerned. Or it may be done by the thread girl (I, 299, 300). Or the operator herself may get up and get a bundle if she runs out of work—but the system installed by respondent contemplates making things as easy as possible for the operator, thus enabling her to earn more money, and it is for that reason that the bundle boys bring the bundles to the sections and the instructors and thread girls supply them to the operators as needed. None of this work is supervisory in the sense that the instructor or thread girl is "over" the operator. These duties of the thread girls most obviously do not put them any where near the class of supervisory employees.

In the first Intermediate Report, and in the first decision of the Board, the Trial Examiner and Board did not find the thread girls to be supervisory employees. The finding now that they are is an example of the lengths to which the Trial Examiner and Board are willing to go to make a finding against respondent.

The Board's witness, May Fike, testified regarding thread girls (I, 299):

> "A. They carry your work to you and take it away and bring your thread and your binding, keep you supplied, and answer the telephone when the instructor is busy."

That certainly is not a description of "supervisory" work.

Asked if an instructor does any work, May Fike testified (p. 300): "Only when she is instructing some girl," and when not instructing, "she usually examines work part of the time." That certainly is not "supervisory."

Endeavoring to show that instructors had authority over thread girls, the Board asked Mrs. Fike (p. 300) if instructors told thread girls to bring work to the operators; but May Fike answered:

> "A. She would tell her to bring us a certain number of work, if we should be changing work. If we wasn't changing work, she would just tell her to bring us work, if we didn't tell her. We sometimes told the thread girl ourselves."

According to the Board's method of drawing inferences, that would mean that the operators were supervisors over the thread girls because they sometimes "told" the thread girls to bring them work! But we respectfully insist that the complete answer to this matter is that the respondent, through Mr. Baty in 1935, had set up a certain system, dividing the work among operators, instructors, thread girls, inspectors, bundle boys, etc., and the mere fact that an operator told a thread girl to bring her work, or an instructor told an operator "this seam should be sewn this way," or a thread girl told an instructor to answer the phone, or an operator told Mr. Baty or the mechanical department that her machine must be fixed, or an inspector sent a garment back to an operator "to be repaired," or Mrs. Tyhurst told the cutters or pattern makers to "put another notch" in the pattern, doesn't mean that the operators are over the thread girls, or the thread girls over the instructors, or the instructors over the operators or thread girls, or the inspectors over the operators, or Mrs. Tyhurst over the cutting or pattern department, or the operators over Mr. Baty or the mechanical department. It merely means that each employee is carrying out his own part of the work in accordance with the plan laid out by Mr. Baty. None of them could "enforce" their "orders" or requests except through Mr. Baty, and the testimony of the employees, generally, shows that they did not regard the instructors, thread girls, inspectors, Mrs. Tyhurst, et al., as "over" them, but as working with them, all under Mr. Baty.

"Conclusionary" Findings of Board.

The Trial Examiner makes a number of "conclusionary" findings regarding minor and incidental duties of instructors.

For example, the Board finds that the instructors "keep the operators busy" (X, 3852), evidently intending thereby to imply that the instructors had authority to make the girls keep busy. Mrs. Reeves testified that instructors "keep the operators in plenty of work" (II, 411). This testimony referred to keeping the operators supplied with material; it did not refer to discipline of the operators by the instructors or mean that the instructors have authority to or did compel operators to "get busy" or "keep busy." Obviously this finding is a warping of the testimony, and the testimony does not support the "hidden meaning" which the Board places thereon (NLRB v. International Shoe Co., supra).

The Board quotes an isolated sentence from an affidavit (the affidavit not being in evidence) by Mrs. Reeves that "competent instructors teach the operators the particular operations to be performed by them, and constantly supervise the same," from which the Board apparently deduces that the instructors are supervisors over the operators. This is a warped construction of the language used in the affidavit. The words "constantly supervise the same" refer to the work of the operators, not to disciplining the operators. After an instructor has told an operator how to do an operation she doesn't sit idly by and trust to luck that the operator has fully absorbed the instruction and will be able to do the work correctly. Naturally the instructor goes back to the operator's machine to see if she has correctly learned the operation and it is in this sense that she "constantly supervises" the work of the operators. This is as much for the benefit of the operators as of the respondent because then the operator has less repair work. We submit that the Board's interpretation of Mrs. Reeves's statement and the conclusion drawn therefrom constitute a distortion and warping of the meaning of Mrs. Reeves's statement, and the language above-quoted of the Court in the International Shoe case, supra, l. c. 38, as to "hidden meanings" is here again applicable.

The finding that instructors "report to the office weekly" to go over the cards, does not connote any supervisory authority in the instructors—a payroll clerk makes up the payroll and presents it to his superiors but that does not make him supervisor over all the persons listed on the payroll. The fact that the instructors report to the office may indicate that Mr. Baty is their supervisor but it carries no implication that the instructors are supervisors—janitors and all types of non-supervisory employees have to report to their superiors concerning their work.

The Trial Examiner finds that the instructors determine who shall take a day off when work is slack. This finding, presumably, is based on May Fike's testimony (I, 302). Her testimony contains a mass of contradictions and is wholly unreliable, so much so that even the Trial Examiner and Board refused to believe her story regarding the termination of her employment and refused her reinstatement, the Trial Examiner saying: "The undersigned does not credit this testimony of Fike" (X, 3891).

The laying off of operators, whether for a day or a season, is done by the office, and any part the instructor or thread girl may have in designating the rotation of any such day lay-offs among the operators is merely routine and clerical (II, 411-12, 450-51). May Fike's testimony doesn't warrant the Board's findings—but even if the Board's finding is taken literally, it is clearly not such a supervisory duty as to make the instructors "representatives of the management" (NLRB v. Sands Mfg. Co., 306 U. S. 332, 341-342).

We submit that these and the various other "conclusionary" and "inferential" findings of the Trial Examiner regarding the instructors and thread girls, do not support the ultimate finding that they are supervisory employees. A detailed discussion of all these subsidiary conclusions of the Trial Examiner would unduly extend this brief—he cites no evidence to support many of them.

and many of them carry no implication of supervisory authority—as for example, the finding that instructors are "carried on a time worker's pay roll, while the operators are paid on a piece rate basis." (X, 3852). The bundle boys and janitors are also on the time worker's pay roll—are they therefore also supervisors? The finding that the instructors "are responsible to Baty for the quality and quantity of work in their respective sections" is not supported by the evidence. The instructors have nothing to do with the "supply" of work reaching the sections—if no work comes, the section does no work; if work does come, the operators are glad to do as much as they can for their pay is on a piece work basis (II, 450-1).

But perhaps the most amazing conclusionary finding of the Trial Examiner is that the operators didn't know of the change in the authority of the instructors made in 1935 by Mrs. Reed and Mr. Baty (X, 3851, note 17).

The Trial Examiner, faced with incontrovertible evidence that in 1935 (four years before the complaint herein was filed), Mrs. Reed made a change in her factory set-up, by which Mr. Baty was put in complete charge thereof, and all supervisory authority taken away from the instructors, seeks to avoid the effect of this evidence by finding that the operators didn't know of this change! The fact of, and the reasons for, this change were clearly shown, but the Trial Examiner ignores this evidence because it interferes with his theory for finding that respondent dominated the DGWU through the instructors.

Concerning this change, Mrs. Reed testified (VII, 2121-2-3-4):

> "Mr. Ingraham: Mrs. Reed, when Mr. Baty became production manager, were any changes made in the authority given instructors?
>
> . . . . . .

A. Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Ingraham) What was the reason?

A. I had sat through all of the testimony in the NRA, and it was charged time and again that the instructors had favorites and discriminated, and it occurred to me that if I would put the authority in one person who would not be in such close contact with the operators, it would be better. This was the first time in the history of my business that I had anyone in charge of the plant that didn't have numerous other jobs to do—other responsibilities. Originally, I had been in charge of my plant myself. I had done all of my own buying, designing, and some selling, and a great many other things, and naturally, only had limited time to spend in the plant, then, when Mrs. Reeves assisted me and eventually took over the production management, she was in the same position. She had to manage the plant, but she also had this merchandising to do. So when I thought she had too much to do I gave her the merchandising and gave Mr. Baty the plant to run, with nothing else to do, and I expected him to spend his time in the plant. He had already been in there as Mrs. Reeves's assistant for some time. We had a very good system of cards—of keeping records of the operators, their work, and I felt very sure that he could take that over, and we would relieve the instructors of responsibility they had had of settling differences and acting on their own in anything that came up with the operators that they had had in the past. One reason was, Mrs. Reeves didn't have time to settle them herself. And they had, naturally, taken on a certain amount of authority, both with my running the plant and Mrs. Reeves running the plant.

When I talked with Mr. Baty about running it, we discussed these charges that had been made in the NRA about the instructors not being fair to this one and that one, and I felt he could take it over. And as far as the work was concerned, the instructor would still sit down and show a girl how to do her operation, if she needed to. She would still know what kind of work she would give to the different operators. As far as putting the work through, it seemed that that would be a very possible thing to do.

So, when I put Mr. Baty in there, whether it was a wise thing or the right thing, I did give him the whole authority and expected him to take care of any differences that came up about the instructors, and to relieve the instructors of the authority that had caused the discussion in the NRA case. • • •

Q. What did an instructor do after Mr. Baty took over the plant?

A. Well, as far as turning her work out, she still did her instructing. She showed a girl how to do the work. She gave the work out to the operator, but when there was any difference of opinion—any operator that wasn't willing to do just what she was told by the instructor, she would wait until Mr. Baty came to settle it, or else she would let the girl pick out what kind of work she did want to do.

Q. Did the instructors under Mr. Baty have anything to do with the hiring, the disciplining, or the discharging of operators?

A. No, nothing whatever.

Q. Did the instructors have any authority to represent or speak for the management in any way?

A. No."

Mr. Baty definitely testified that after he took charge of the Production Department in June, 1935, he had not followed the former practice of discussing matters with instructors, but had taken away all supervisory powers from them. Mr. Baty testified as follows (II, 450-51):

"A. I changed the work of the instructors, I would say, to a very great extent. Prior to the time I took them, they were considered more or less supervisors and entered into the discussions and recommendations as to the ability of different operators and made different recommendations as to which operators would be recalled after they were laid off, and after I took over the plant, I put instructors strictly on a basis of an instructor, and they were there to assist the operator in the performance of their work, and nothing else. They had no supervision over the girls, and it was none of their concern as to how the girls performed. They were to give them the work, take it away from them when it was finished, show them how to do it, if they didn't know how, and that was the extent that they were held liable for the girls in the section."

Mrs. Reeves testified that she knew of her own knowledge that Mr. Baty made this change in the authority of the instructors and that since that time the system has been that no instructor shall have any authority even to discipline (II, 425).

Lois Barnes (VIII, 2846) and Edith Dean (pp. 2862, 2864) testified that the change in the authority of instructors "was noticeable immediately" after Mr. Baty took over.

The Trial Examiner, in order to sustain his position that there was no change made in the authority of the instructors in June, 1935, makes the extraordinary finding that even if the change was made, the operators during the period from 1935 to 1937, never heard of it! (X, 3851, footnote 17.)

This illustrates the far-fetched nature of the Board's inferences in this case. Is it conceivable that 700 operators could work for over two years (from 1935 to 1937), along with the instructors and not know of the change in their relationship, introduced by Mrs. Reed and Mr. Baty in 1935? On the contrary, it is safe to say that every operator knew within a few days and probably within one day, of the changes inaugurated by Mr. Baty when he took charge of the factory. There was no obligation on the part of respondent to send out a formal notice to the operators concerning the change.

Instructors and Thread Girls Not Regarded by Employes As Supervisors.

Finally, the Trial Examiner finds that the instructors "regard themselves as supervisors and are so regarded by the operators" (X, 3852). This is contrary to the overwhelming evidence. The eleven employee witnesses which respondent was permitted to place on the stand at the second hearing, testified that they did not regard the instructors as supervisors.

Oma Lee Cooper testified as follows (VIII, 2584, 2586, 2587):

"Q. Did the instructors, any instructor under whom you worked ever exercise any authority of hiring or firing or disciplining girls? * * *

A. No, I never saw them exercise any authority over any girl at any time. * * *

Q. Mrs. Cooper, from the time that you became employed with the Donnelly Company until August of 1939, did you at any time consider an instructor your boss?

A. No, I understood when I went there—I was told that the instructor was not the boss, that their job was to instruct, and that is all I ever saw any of them do.

Q. By 'instruct' what do you mean?

A. They sit down at the machine and show the girl how to work, and if the girl does not understand it, why, she explains to them just how the work is done, and sees that it is done right, and also she brings them work and their samples, and things like that."

To the same general effect:

Alice Freed (IX, 3206-7, 3195); Louise Garrett (IX, 3122, 3136); Lydia Phillips (IX, 3078, 3092, 3093, 3094, 3097); Ruby Clayton (IX, 3046, 3059, 3060); Ethel Riegel (IX, 3019, 3020); Jessie Mudd (VIII, 3000); Edith Dean (VIII, 2861, 2864); Lois Barnes (VIII, 2779); Mary Warth (VIII, 2731).

The Trial Examiner stopped respondent and intervener from showing this by the remainder of the "1200 employees," on the ground that further evidence thereof would be cumulative—but notwithstanding such ruling, the Trial Examiner now makes a finding directly contrary to such overwhelming evidence. We respectfully submit that such finding is not and can not be based on the evidence but must be, and is, grounded in the bias and prejudgment of the issues by the Trial Examiner, and likewise by the Board, which merely adopts the Trial Examiner's findings "lock, stock and barrel."

The Board's witness, May Stevens, had this to say of an instructor's work (X, 3688): "The work I did maybe would have been classed as inspector work or instructor's work. * * * Well, that would be maybe showing a girl about a certain class of work or something. I believe that would be an instructor's duty. I have done that at times." (And she was a member of the ILGWU.)

We respectfully submit that the Board's finding that the respondent continued to hold the instructors and thread girls, out to the operators as supervisory employees, after their supervisory powers were taken away from them by Mr. Baty, shortly after June 25th, 1935, and the Board's inference that the operators did not know of this change in 1937, nearly two years later, are a little short of fantastic.

And, so far as the thread girls are concerned, there is no evidence that they ever have exercised any supervisory authority. In the former decision the Trial Examiner and Board did not find the thread girls to be supervisory employes. Now, in the present finding, the Trial Examiner just throws them in with the instructors for good measure. This finding is contrary to the direct testimony of the eleven witnesses whom respondent was permitted to call in the second hearing.

The Trial Examiner refused to permit Respondent to show that instructors in other garment plants were not regarded as supervisory employees and were eligible for membership in the ILGWU. Respondent's offers of proof on this subject (Ex. 1-SSSSS, Ex. 1-TTTTT and Ex. 1-UUUUU, X. 3787-3792) were denied by the Trial Examiner (X, 3782). Then, after refusing to receive this evidence, the Trial Examiner and Board proceeded to convict respondent on the ground that the instructors and thread girls were not proper members of the DGWU! (See Ranco, Inc., and other cases decided by the Board itself, quoted supra, pp. 81-83.)

The instructors punch the time clock in the factory (II, 413). Many operators earn more money than the instructors.

We respectfully submit that the evidence does not support the Board's finding that the instructors and thread girls are "supervisory" employees, or any of the findings based thereon.

(3) Rose Todd Was Not a Supervisory Employee.

(a) ROSE TODD'S DUTIES WERE NOT "SUPERVISORY."

The Board finds that Rose Todd's position was one "involving duties of a supervisory nature" (X, 3856).

Rose Todd's work for the respondent was fully described in the evidence and shows conclusively that she was not a "supervisory" employee. The Board's own description of her duties shows on its face that her work was not of a supervisory character (X, 3854).

Her salary at the time the DGWU was organized in April, 1937, was $130 a month (I, 31)—obviously not the salary of a supervisory employee, considering the length of time (some eleven years) that she had been with the company.

Miss Todd described her own duties as follows: She formerly worked for respondent, left its employ in 1931, and returned in 1933. At that time she was told she would have to take whatever work there was to give her (I, 30); she just filled in one place and another (I, 29); she was thread girl for a time and worked in the modeling department for a time and since about December, 1936 (I, 28), her principal work has been that of "supply girl" for the sewing sections; that is keeping the sections supplied with thread, notions, etc. (I, 27). She testified (I, 28):

> "Q. It is your job then to check up on the delivery of these various notions and supplies and material that should be at the various departments or sections?
> A. That is right. * * *
> Q. Do you have any assistant?
> A. No."

Mrs. Reeves describes Rose Todd's work as follows (II, 410-11):

> "Q. Will you state, if you know, what position Rose Todd holds with the Donnelly Garment Company, or what her duties are?
> A. Well, Rose Todd works in the factory, and she is a—I would say a sort of a go-between between the sections that are actually working on the garments, helping them check up. In an organization of that kind there are lots of things that get misplaced, like lace, buttons, and things like that, and she assists in getting things to the section that they need to work with, and notifying anyone if the operators do not have what they need to work with, such as if we had a cut of work downstairs and we didn't have the proper kind of thread she would check up on it and notify me. And the same, whether it be lace, buttons, rickrack or whatever it is.

Q. Is Rose Todd in a supervisory position?

A. She is not."

Mr. Baty described her work as follows (II, 467):

"Q. (By Mr. Ingraham) Mr. Baty, does Rose Todd hold any supervisory position at the Donnelly Garment Company?

A. She does not.

Q. What work does she perform? * * *

A. She checks with the sections all over the plant, looking for merchandise that is delayed, dresses and bundles—checks to see what they need in the way of thread, lace, buttons or any other notions. * * *

Q. (By Mr. Ingraham) In 1937 what did she do?

A. She was working on the same work that she is now, checking delivery of notions and supplies to the sections" (II, 468).

Mrs. Reed testified as follows concerning Rose Todd:

"Q. Mrs. Reed, was Rose Todd an employee who had any authority to speak for the management.

A. She did not.

Q. Do you recall what work she was doing when she was last employed by the company?

A. Yes. She went into the different sections to see if they had sufficient thread and findings to complete their bundles, if there had been any errors made in sending down the proper amount of findings, so that the merchandise could go out promptly. That was her real job. Anything she found they were wanting in the section, she would go back to the notions department or thread department and send it down." * * * (VII, 2116).

"Q. Now, Mrs. Reed, when Rose came back did she have any ability (authority) with respect to hiring or firing or disciplining any employees?

A. Absolutely none whatever.

Q. Was there anybody over whom she was boss in any way?

A. No.

Q. This work you say she did, findings work, did she have assistance in doing that?

A. She did it herself. She went all through the plant, because here and there the work would be held up because the right colored thread didn't come down, or there should have been 100 yards of pleating and maybe only 90 yards came, and the operators and the instructor would be busy, and they would throw it aside, and some times whole cuts of (fol. 3261) work would be held up for some small thing, and it wouldn't always be reported promptly, so her job was to go through and see if there was any work piling up that needed something to put it through, and then she would go back and get that or report it to the girl who sent out the findings. She had no one assisting her. She was in no place of responsibility, except to see that these trimmings and findings would be sent down to the section so that the work could go on through.

Q. Did you ever discuss with Rose Todd the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever have any discussion with Miss Todd with reference to the Loyalty League?

A. I did not" (VII, 2117).

Also see pp. 2157, 2167.

It certainly can not be reasonably contended that the duties of Rose Todd constitute duties of a supervisory character, and we submit that any inference to that effect is unwarranted by the evidence.

That the Board itself does not really feel that Rose Todd was a supervisory employee, is shown by its statement (X, 3857): "Irrespective of Todd's supervisory status * * *."

(b) Rose Todd As an "All-Around Man."

The Board refers to the testimony of Mr. Swinney, president of the First National Bank, that he had known Rose Todd for ten to twelve years as "a kind of all-around man for the company," and that she had come into the bank for several years as respondent's representative (X, 3856).

However, the context of Mr. Swinney's testimony shows that in referring to her as an "all-around man" he did not refer to her as being a "supervisory" employee, and no such "hidden meaning" should be read into it (NLRB v. International Shoe Co., (C. C. A. 8) infra, 116 F. 2d 31, l. c. 38). Mr. Swinney testified (II, 718x) that his contact with Rose Todd was: "just coming and going, bringing some stuff up to my office, or something of that kind; just in a general way." This does not indicate in the slightest that by referring to her as an "all-around man" he meant she was a "supervisory" employee, nor support the Trial Examiner's finding that she was a representative of the management in the sense used in labor cases. Of course, an office boy who brings papers to a bank does so "as representative" of his employer—and it is apparent that is what Rose Todd did, and that is the type of work Mr. Swinney referred to.

(c) Rose Todd and the Fern Sigler Incident.

The Board contends that Rose Todd's participation in the Fern Sigler demonstration of April 23, shows that she occupied a close and confidential relation to the management and "represented the management." The Board seizes on her use of the word "we" in Board's Exhibit 5 (III, 801-7) as showing this (X, 3857). But employees generally use the word "we" when speaking of the companies for which they work. The language must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances. Rose Todd used the word "we" when she was referring to herself and to the employees as a group. For example, when she said "It has always been the practice here that if we had any complaints to make, we made them" (III, 805), she obviously did not refer to the complaints of the management but to complaints of the employees, of which she was one. Likewise, when she said, "What do you think you have gained that we haven't by joining the union?" (III, 803), and "You expect the majority to rule if they believe like you; we expect it to rule when they believe like we do", (p. 803). In such quotations Rose Todd when she used the word "we" was not referring to the management but to the employees having the same views that she had. But the Board attempts to find "hidden meanings" and implications in Miss Todd's spontaneous and natural use of the word "we"—as said by this Court in NLRB v. International Shoe Co., supra, 1. c. 38:

> "But in the most fantastic fashion the Board and counsel find hidden meanings in innocent words and phrases, almost as if the interview had been written in some abstruse code."

At I, 61, the Board's counsel asked Miss Todd: "Q. What do you mean by 'we'?" And she answered: "A. The employees." But the Board now disregards her answer and seeks to distort her later use of the word "we" into meaning that she referred to the management or herself and the management. This is another of the many unfair and nonjudicial inferences made by the Trial Examiner and Board from "innocent words and phrases" condemned by the Court in NLRB v. International Shoe Co., supra, and requires us to unduly extend this brief to reply thereto.

We submit that the evidence shows that Rose Todd, in this whole Fern Sigler incident, was merely speaking for herself, or as one of the employees. She testified with reference to said incident as follows (I, 156-7):

"Q. (Interrupting) Just a moment. I asked you the simple question, in what capacity were you talking?

A. Just as an employee, just as one of them.

Q. Not for the Loyalty League?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nor for any group?

A. No, sir, not other than as one of the employees.

Q. Then you said: 'However, they felt so keenly about it we don't think we can do anything about it.' Did you mean just yourself then?

A. I meant the employees.

Q. Were you representing the employees?

A. No, I wasn't. I don't know. Maybe I didn't explain the use of the word 'we' very clearly. I wasn't speaking for anybody. I was just using 'we' without any particular thought about it.

* * * * * * *

Q. Were you just talking for yourself there, or were you talking for the management?

A. Speaking for myself."

Even if she had been a minor supervisory employee, as the Board claims she was, the expression of her individual views would not justify a finding against her employer. As was said by the Court in NLRB v. Mathieson Alkali Works, (C. C. A. 4) 114 F. 2d 796, 802:

> "But mere isolated expressions of minor supervisory employees, which appear to be nothing more than the utterance of individual views, not authorized by the employer and not of such a character or made under such circumstances as to justify the conclusion that they are an expression of his policy, will not ordinarily justify a finding against him."

The Board finds (X, 3857):

> "After the demonstration in Sigler's section and the conference in the office it was Todd who finally sent the employees back to work."

This is not justified by the evidence. In the first place the Board's statement just quoted is a warped presentation of the testimony. Rose Todd in testifying about the statement, said: "I didn't go down and send anybody back to work" (I, 80). The testimony was that the girls refused to go back to work unless Mrs. Sigler left, and that it was Mr. Baty's orders that caused them to return to work. Mr. Baty testified (II, 450):

> "A. I went down to the sixth floor, the machine where Fern Sigler was working, and got Fern Sigler to go to the office, and at the same time I turned and instructed the girls to all get back to their machines and get to work. * * * I heard shouts from amongst the crowd that they wasn't going to work until Fern Sigler left" (To same effect see II, 495-6).

This warped presentation of the testimony of Rose Todd further shows the Board's evident prejudgment of the case against respondent and its willingness to base adverse findings on isolated statements even though disproved by other evidence.

There is nothing to indicate that Mr. Baty and Mrs. Hyde "acquiesced in all that Miss Todd said" as the Board finds (X, 3857). They probably felt that Miss Todd was entitled to express her opinion the same as Fern Sigler had the right to (and did) express hers.

The fact that Mr. Baty let the two employees, Rose Todd and Fern Sigler, argue their views back and forth does not mean that Rose Todd was "dominating the scene," as the Board finds, or show that she was a supervisory employee, as the Board infers. Mr. Baty was an executive, interested in keeping the plant at work and solving the problem with Mrs. Sigler as best he could; he may have thought the best way to do so was to let the two employees express themselves and thereby relieve their minds. He interposed when he thought proper and said that he could not send 700 girls home and keep one, and that it would be best for Mrs. Sigler to go home for a few days until things quieted down. This was justifiable (NLRB v. Asheville Hosiery Co., (C. C. A. 4) 104 F. 2d 288, l. c. 292). It is highly significant that the Board or ILGWU did not produce Mrs. Sigler as a witness, or find that respondent discriminated against her.

There is nothing in the entire Exhibit (Board's Ex. 5, III, 801) indicating any opposition by the management to the ILGWU or to Mrs. Sigler's belonging to it. Mrs. Hyde said "It is perfectly all right. We have no objections." Mr. Baty and Mrs. Hyde both said repeatedly (Board's Ex. 5) that they would call Mrs. Sigler back to work when things quieted down (although they then knew of her affiliation with the ILGWU), and Mr. Baty testified (II, 499) that he instructed Mrs. Hyde to call Mrs. Sigler back to work and that she called but did not get in touch with her (and the Board finds that the respondent tried to call Sylvia Hull back to work even though it was then known that she was a member of the ILGWU).

We submit that the Fern Sigler incident wholly fails to show any basis for the Board's finding that Rose Todd "represented the management," and that the Board's findings with reference thereto merely exemplify the Board's bias and prejudice against respondent.

(d) Re Rose Todd Having a Desk.

The Board in the trial of this case spent much time inquiring whether Rose Todd had a desk and where it was, and the Board finds (X, 3855) "Todd was assigned a desk in the factory—first on the ninth floor and later on the seventh floor—". We submit that any inference that Rose Todd was a supervisory employee because she had a desk at which to do her work or because the desk was on the ninth or seventh floors, is far fetched and wholly unwarranted by the evidence or the law. It is another case of attempting to give a "hidden meaning" (NLRB v. International Shoe Co., supra) to one of the most innocent and ordinary of circumstances—having a desk at which to do one's work.

(e). The Employees Did Not Regard Rose Todd As a Supervisory Employee.

All the employees whom respondent was permitted to call as witnesses testified that they did not regard Rose Todd as a supervisory employee, or as a representative of the management, and that they felt no compulsion in joining the DGWU because of her activity on behalf of the DGWU.

Hazel Saucke testified as follows (VIII, 2643, 2644):

"Q. Did you ever get the impression that Rose Todd represented the management in any capacity?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did she ever hold herself out as speaking for the management in connection with the formation of a union, or anything having to do with the union?

A. No, sir."

To the same general effect:

Mrs. Freed (IX, 3207, 3208); Mrs. Garrett (IX, 3122, 3137); Lydia Phillips (IX, 3094); Ruby Clayton (IX, 3058); Ethel Riegel (IX, 3019, 3024); Edith Dean (VIII, 2859); Lois Barnes (VIII, 2830); Mary Warth (VIII, 2723, 2726); Oma Lee Cooper (VIII, 2583, 2584, 2592, 2593); Jessie Mudd (VIII, 2928, 2929); Mary Warth (VIII, 2723-4).

To this should be added the offered testimony to the same effect, of the remaining 1,200 employees proffered by respondent and intervener.

Furthermore, it is significant that the Board's witnesses did not testify that they regarded Rose Todd as a supervisory employee or as representing the management, although the Board placed some eight employee witnesses on the stand.

Thus, under the test laid down in the International Machinists case, Supra, the respondent is not chargeable with her activities—as the employees had no reason to believe (and, in fact, did not believe) that she was "speaking for the management" in any of her activities referred to by the Board.

Re: Other Alleged Supervisory Employees.

The Board in its decision (paragraphs 3 and 4, X. 3858-9) devotes scant space to Hobart Atherton and the other alleged supervisory employees, and we shall therefore reply very briefly.

Hobart Atherton. The Board's statement of Mr. Atherton's duties shows he was not a supervisory employee. He testified that he was clerk in the maintenance department, that as clerk he "transmitted" orders from Mr. Baty to the persons who were to do the work, and helped them to do it if necessary—"I assist any of the fellows in the maintenance department that need help on anything. If it is necessary to move a bin, I help them move it * * *" (II, 593).

Mrs. Reed testified (VI, 2117-18) that Mr. Atherton did not hold a supervisory position.

The employees testified that they did not regard Mr. Atherton as a supervisory employee (VIII, 2934-5; IX, 3208-9, 3137, 3095-6, 3058, 3024, 2872, 2644, 2593), until the Trial Examiner stopped respondent from calling further witnesses.

None of the Board's witnesses testified that Mr. Atherton was a supervisory employee.

Heath Cowan and Ortense Root. We find no evidence that these employees were supervisors or that they did or said anything that smacks of coercion in the slightest degree.

Mrs. Gray. The employees testified that they did not regard Mrs. Gray as a supervisory employee (VIII, 2944-5; IX, 3218, 3146, 3098, 3065).

Mrs. Reed testified (VII, 2128-9, 2232-3) that Mrs. Gray was one of the clerks who did the selling in the outlet store, and that she had no supervisory authority.

Mrs. Tyhurst. Mrs. Reed testified that Mrs. Tyhurst was not a supervisory employee (VII, 2127, 2216).

The employees did not regard her as a supervisory employee (VIII, 2945; IX, 3065, 3098, 3146, 3218).

Marvin Price. Mrs. Reed testified re Mr. Price's duties and that he had no supervisory authority (VII, 2127-8).

The employees did not regard him as a representative of the management (VIII, 2945; IX, 3098-9, 3146, 3158).

Ted Scoles. Mr. Scoles was a cutter. He had no supervisory authority (Mrs. Reed, VII, 2241).

The employees did not regard him as a supervisory employee (VIII, 2946; IX, 3146-7; 3219).

Mrs. Bogart. Mrs. Bogart worked in the dividing department. She had no supervisory authority (Mr. Baty, II, 477).

The employees did not regard her as a supervisory employee (VIII, 2945; IX, 3065-6).

Mrs. Strickland. Mrs. Strickland was a pattern maker. She had no supervisory authority (Mrs. Reed, VII, 2133-4).

The employees did not regard her as a supervisory employee (I, 38; VIII, 2946; IX, 3147).

We respectfully submit that the Board's findings that the foregoing employees were supervisory employees or "representatives of the management" are not supported by the evidence, and are contrary to the authorities.

The Board evidently considers an employee a representative of the management if he is "in charge" of any work, even if it were merely seeing that the waste paper baskets were emptied or if he "transmits" orders from the manager to workers, as Mr. Atherton did. This conception is erroneous under the authorities: Ballston-Stillwater Knitting Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 2) 98 F. 2d 758, 761-2; NLRB v. Swank Products, Inc., (C. C. A. 3) 108 F. 2d 872, 875; NLRB v. Sands Manufacturing Company, 306 U. S. 332, 341-342; Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 5) 113 F. 2d 85, 92; Martel Mills Corporation v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 4) 114 F. 2d 624; Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 5) 112 F. 2d 545; NLRB v. Mathteson Alkali Works, Inc., (C. C. A. 4) 114 F. 2d 796; Cupples Co. Mfrs. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 8) 106 F. 2d 100; E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 4) 116 F. 2d 388, 399-400; NLRB v. Sparks-Withington Co., (C. C. A. 6) 119 F. 2d 78, 81; NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding & Dry D. Co., (C. C. A. 3) 135 F. 2d 15; and NLRB v. Clinton Woolen Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6) 141 F. 2d 753, 757.

Even the acts of supervisory employees may not be condemned unless they are of a coercive character (Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Brotherhood of Ry. & S. S. Clerks, 281 U. S. 548, l. c. 568; Foote Bros. Gear & Mch. Corp. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 7) 114 F. 2d 611, l. c. 628; Humble Oil & Ref. Co. v. NLRB, Supra, l. c. 88.

Re the Activities of Alleged Supervisory Employees, Generally.

Entirely aside from the duties of the above-named employees, we call attention to the following testimony as to supervisory employees, generally, which makes a clean sweep of all the Board's contentions as to the effect on the employees of the participation of instructors, thread girls, Rose Todd, and all other alleged supervisory employees, in connection with the DGWU:

Mrs. Freed testified (IX, 3210):

"Q. Was there anybody who attended the meeting of April 27, 1937, at which the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union was formed, that you regarded as a supervisory employee or a boss or a representative of the management?

A. Not that I saw."

To the same general effect:

Mary Warth (VIII, 2726-7); Oma Lee Cooper (VIII, 2593, 2599); Louise Garrett (IX, 3138, 3139); Lydia Phillips (IX, 3078, 3092, 3093, 3094); Ruby Clayton (IX, 3046); Jessie Mudd (VIII, 2936, 2937); Lois Barnes (VIII, 2817); Mary Warth (VIII, 2730); Hazel Saucke (VIII, 2631, 2632); and all the other employees except for the Trial Examiner's ruling stopping further evidence as cumulative (IX, 3253).

We respectfully submit, first, that the persons found by the Board in the case at bar to be supervisors, were not supervisors but were working employees entitled to the benefits of the NLR Act, and, secondly, that none of the acts of such alleged supervisors, taken in their setting, were reasonably likely to have restrained the employees' choice. Nor can it fairly be said that the employees had just cause to believe that such alleged supervisors were acting for the management (International Association of Machinists v. NLRB, supra).

B-3.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions with Reference to the Loyalty League Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

1. The Loyalty League Was Not a "Prior Labor Union" and the Holding of the Newport News Shipbuilding Case Is Not Applicable.

The Board seizes on the existence of this organization to claim that the DGWU was an outgrowth of or successor to the Loyalty League and that the respondent, through the Loyalty League, dominated and interfered with the free choice of the employees in the formation of the DGWU, evidently hoping to bring the case at bar within the purview of NLRB v. Newport News Shipbuilding Co., 308 U. S. 241, and other similar cases in which it has been held that a new plan or union was an outgrowth of an old union.

At the outset we wish to point out that the situation with reference to the Loyalty League here bears no resemblance to the situations existing in the Newport News case and similar cases. The Loyalty League was not a labor union or "representation plan" in any sense of the word. It had never had any dealings with the management relative to working conditions, wages, or other like matters. It performed none of the functions of a labor union or representation plan. It was a purely social organization. It had no dues; it had no regular meetings; it kept no minutes. Its only activities were the holding of parties or dances of a purely social nature. The organization of the DGWU did not grow out of or affect the Loyalty League. The Loyalty League continued in the same way it always had, engaging only in social activities, while the DGWU from its inception was a labor union and engaged in all the activities of a labor union.

That the activities of the Loyalty League were purely social would seem to be definitely established by the testimony of the Board's own witness, Etta Dorsey, an admittedly hostile witness who would not have hesitated to characterize the Loyalty League differently if there had been the slightest basis for doing so. She testified (IX, 3362-3):

"Q. Do you know whether you had more of the Union meetings than the Loyalty League meetings?

A. I know there were some concerning the Union, the Loyalty League meetings were more or less social affairs, you know.

Q. As a matter of fact, that was all the Loyalty League was, a social group?

A. Yes, a kind of get-together and get acquainted affair, and plan on good times, and things like that.

Q. Yes. You had parties and picnics?

A. Yes, that was the object of it."

Also May Fike, one of the Board's chief witnesses and a witness highly adverse to the petitioner, testified that she joined the Loyalty League at the start (Transc. 1264) and attended all its meetings (Transc. 1273); and she says social events were its only activities (Transc. 1411):

"Q. Outside of having dances, and such gatherings, what, if any, did the Loyalty League do?

A. They just had their entertainments is all I know of.

Q. That is all you ever knew of, was just entertainments?

A. That is all I remember of."

Also, the Board's witness, Mrs. Keyes, testified (X, IV, 3653):

"Well, there was no activity in the Loyalty League other than little parties they have."

Thus, three of the Board's main witnesses, in addition to Rose Todd, corroborate respondent's position that the Loyalty League engaged only in social activities.

The following witnesses testified to the same general effect, namely, that the Loyalty League was purely a social and not a labor organization: Mrs. Lynn Davis (II, 543); Hobart Atherton (II, 561); Mrs. Nellie Stites (II, 622); Mrs. Claris Martin (II, 652); Mrs. Pearl Field (II, 676); Mrs. Ruby Lago (II, 678-9); Oma Lee Cooper (VIII, 2581-2); Hazel Saucke (2632); Mary Warth (2718, 2727); Lois Barnes (2777-8); Edith Dean (2860); Jessie Mudd (2927-8); Ethel Riegel (IX, 3011); Ruby Clayton (3052); Lydia Phillips (3090); Louise Garrett (3129-30); Alice Freed (3196).

In addition to the testimony of the foregoing witnesses, all to the same effect, should be added the testimony of all the 1,200 employees which respondent and intervener would have called in the second hearing if they had not been stopped by the Trial Examiner (IX, 3253, 3254; and see offers of proof, Exhibit 1-OOOO, Exhibit 1-RRRR, III, 762-3, 764), all to the effect that the Loyalty League was entirely separate from the DGWU and that they so understood; that the Loyalty League was a purely social organization with no labor union activities and that the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union was not a continuation or successor to the Loyalty League in any way and that they so understood, and that both continued to function in their respective fields.

Not a single witness of the Board or ILGWU testified to the contrary!

In Cupples Co. Manufacturers v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 F. 2d 100, there was an organization known as the "Loyalty and Service Club," admittedly established by the company. 95% to 97% of the employees belonged to the Club (l. c. 106). Yet the fact that its members also belonged to the union, was not held to constitute domination by the management through that Club.

One of the most unfair inferences drawn by the Trial Examiner and Board is that everything done by the employes is done by the Loyalty League—merely because most employes belonged to the Loyalty League.

2. The Loyalty League Was Not Formed, Dominated or Used by Respondent, and Its Alleged Activities Are Not Attributable to Respondent.

(a) THE LOYALTY LEAGUE WAS NOT FORMED BY RESPONDENT.

The persons named by the Board as active in forming the League were Mrs. Gray and Mrs. Strickland. These were not supervisory employees, as we have shown (Point B-2) although the Board finds that they were such. Under the holdings in the Magnolia and Ballston-Stillwater and other cases, supra, Mrs. Gray and Mrs. Strickland were clearly "employees to whom the Act guarantees the right of self organization," and their activities in the Loyalty League cannot be attributed to respondent.

We submit that the Board's finding that the Loyalty League was formed by the respondent because Mrs. Gray and Mrs. Strickland were active in organizing it, is not justified by the evidence.

(b) The Loyalty League After Its Formation Was Not Dominated or Used by Respondent.

We further submit that there is no evidence to support the Board's finding that the respondent "used" the Loyalty League, or "acted through" the Loyalty League to coerce or interfere with the employees in their right of free choice of bargaining agents.

Mrs. Reed testified (VII, 2066-7) most positively that the respondent did not act through the Loyalty League in connection with the formation of the plant union (DGWU) also, Mrs. Reeves (II, 408-9; IV, 1116-17); Mrs. Keyes (II, 431); Mr. Baty was not a member (II, 468).

The employees which respondent and intervener were permitted to call, testified that the Loyalty League brought no pressure to bear upon them in connection with the formation of the DGWU, or interfere in any way with their freedom of choice as to union affiliations.

Oma Lee Cooper (VIII, 2582); Hazel Saucke (2632); Mary Warth (2718, 2723, 2731); Lois Barnes (2778); Edith Dean (2860-61); Jessie Mudd (2927); Ethel Riegel (IX, 3010); Ruby Clayton (3053); Lydia Phillips (3085, 3091); Louise Garrett (3129-30); Alice Freed (3196).

To this should be added the testimony of the "1200 employees" offered by respondent and intervenor (Exhibits 1-OOOO, 1-RRRR, III, 743, 765).

We submit that there is not a scintilla of evidence that the Loyalty League was dominated by respondent nor any basis, save the trial examiner's imagination and conjecture, for the Board's findings and conclusions that the petitioner "used" the Loyalty League to interfere with the employees in their rights under the Act.

B-4.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to the "March 2nd Statement" Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

It clearly appears that the March 2nd Statement was conceived and circulated by two non-supervisory employees, without the knowledge of officials of the company, and was signed voluntarily by the employees generally (IV, 1290, 1296-7, 1294).

The Board evidently recognizes this, and attempts to base a finding of coercion upon the testimony of Mrs. Keyes that Mrs. Reed had said to her that "she would like to have the petition 100%," and that she (Mrs. Keyes) the next day suggested to Pauline Shartzer that she take the petition around and have it signed. It will be noted that Mrs. Keyes did not say that Mrs. Reed asked her to procure the additional names. Also it should be noted that this disagrees with Miss Shartzer's testimony (given in the injunction trial before the Labor Board complaint was filed, IV, 1293-4):

"Q. How did you come to get those sheets? Did you ask for them, say you wanted to circulate them?

A. In the first place, we had discussed it on the 10th floor, the office of the plant. I went to the 9th, in some of my work, and someone asked me if I had seen this petition. I asked them what it was, and I copied it as soon as I could, and compared my copy with Mrs. Sprofera, and in that way I had a copy of what was written up.

Q. What did you do?

A. I took it to the 10th floor and the 9th floor, and anyone we missed on the 9th floor, I asked them to sign them if they cared to.

Q. Were these papers signed voluntarily?

A. They were."

(This was done on March 2d; it was only the last page which was signed on March 5th, V, 1649.)

It should also be noted that Mrs. Reed testified that she did not know how they happened to obtain the further signatures (VII, 2433-4):

> "Q. Did you learn they did get another petition on the 5th of March?
>
> A. I learned that another petition, another page, was gotten up later.
>
> Q. And you don't why that was done?
>
> A. No.
>
> Q. You had nothing to do with it?
>
> A. I had nothing to do with it, Mr. Langsdale."

But if Mrs. Reed did casually say to Mrs. Keyes that she was going to put the March 2nd Statement in the cornerstone of her new building and would like the names of all employees on it, it would not constitute "domination," especially as some 95% of the employes had already signed the paper voluntarily.

The Board seeks to imply something sinister from the fact that a picture was taken by the Kansas City Star of the employees who presented the March 2nd statement to Mrs. Reed. But this is dissipated by Mrs. Reed's testimony which shows that not she, but Mr. Roberts of the Star, suggested the taking of the picture (VII, 2076-7).

In the case of NLRB v. Brandeis & Sons, (C. C. A. 8) 145 F. 2d 556, 567-8, an anti-union petition was circulated during working hours shortly before the election and was signed by 204 employees including several assistant buyers and one department head. It was held not coercive and hence permissible. The March 2nd statement in the case at bar had no elements of coercion but was conceived and circulated by the employes.

In other cases the circulation of statements or petitions among employees have been held no violation of the Act. NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 135 F. 2d 15; NLRB v. Bradford Machine Tool Co., 138 F. 2d 246; NLRB v. Draper Corp., 145 F. 2d 199, l. c. 205; NLRB v. Appalachian Elec. Power Co, 140 F. 2d 217. In the last-cited case, the petition circulated expressed esteem for the manager, as did the March 2nd statement of Mrs. Reed's "humanitarian interest."

The cases cited by the Board at pages 43-44 of their brief are not in point. Most of them dealt with "votes" or "elections," a wholly different situation from the March 2nd statement here.

We respectfully submit that the circumstances regarding the circulation of the March 2nd statement not only do not show any coercion or restraint by respondent upon the employees, but on the contrary, these circumstances show that the overwhelming attitude of the employees against the ILGWU was voluntarily expressed as early as March 2, 1937, and negatives all the findings of the Board that such attitude was produced by any acts of respondent subsequent thereto.

B-5.

Respondent Did Not Dominate the Organization Meeting of the DGWU on April 27th.

The Board, in its former decision herein, found (A. 600): "The rank and file of the respondent's employees had heard nothing of the formation of a labor union prior to the meeting" (of April 27th). This shows that there was no domination, coercion or interference by the management with reference to the DGWU. Obviously, the employees could not be coerced with reference to something they knew nothing about; therefore there was no coercion prior to the organization meeting of April 27, 1937. The evidence, including the minutes, as to what occurred at the April 27th meeting is very complete, and conclusively shows there was no coercion at such meeting (I, 54-59; II, 558-561; III, 821-830). And, as practically all of the 1,300 employees joined at that meeting, there was no later coercion. This covers the whole field.

B-6.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to Use by the DGWU of Company Property and Facilities Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The Board stresses the use by DGWU members and officers of certain ditto and mimeograph machines, files, and other property or facilities of the respondent, as showing assistance by respondent to the DGWU and consequent interference with the employees in their free selection and administration of a labor union (X, 3883). We submit that the inferences drawn are unwarranted by the evidence and demonstrate the Board's bias and prejudice.

In the first place, the use of the property and facilities was inconsiderable and in terms of "assistance" to the DGWU it was wholly insignificant (I, 3560, 62, 62a, 107-8); in the second place the uses complained of were done after working hours (I, 60, 62a, 107); in the third place, it was not authorized by the management, and was unknown to the management (I, 62, 62a; II, 406-7, 411, 431, 468-9; VII, 2113, 2115); in the fourth place, if it had been known to the management, it amounted to no more than common courtesy between employer and employee (Texas & New Orleans R. Co. v. Brotherhood of Ry. & S. S. Clerks, 281 U. S. 548, 568); in the fifth place, similar use was not denied to anyone else; in the sixth place, the use testified to occurred mostly after the formation of the DGWU and could not have constituted any coercion or interference with the employees in their selection of that labor union; in the seventh place, the evidence shows that the choice of the DGWU by the employees was so unanimous and so unquestionably their free and voluntary desire, that there is not the slightest basis for an inference that their choice of, or adherence to, the DGWU was affected in the remotest degree by any of these matters mentioned by the Board.

All the testimony was that such small use of respondent's facilities as was made—use of mimeograph machine one evening by boy (I, 59-60); use of ditto machine (I, 62); use of typewriter occasionally (I, 107)—was done outside working hours (I, 264, 396); that the company did not know of it (I, 62, 62a); that the bulletin boards are "used by anybody that cares to use them" (I, 129); that officials never authorized such use by the Union (Mrs. Reeves, II, 406-7; Mr. Keyes, II, 431; Mr. Baty, II, 479-480-1).

Mrs. Reed testified (VII, 2118) that the employees "have always used the telephones and still do"; that the Company has "always been generous" in letting the employees use equipment after working hours; that they used the sewing machines after working hours for personal use, until the Wage and Hour restrictions prevented; that the employees have always been permitted to pass notes through the sections; that she didn't know of notices being sent through the sections by the DGWU, but if the DGWU sent notices by bundle boys or by telephone, it was no different from what the employees had been doing for years (p. 2115); that as long "as we have had bulletin boards" (about fifteen years), "the employees have used them."

This is not a case where facilities are granted to one union and denied to another.

Under the foregoing circumstances the inconsequential use of the company's facilities is not "substantial evidence" of domination or support. NLRB v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 114 F. 2d 796, l. c. 802; Ballston-Stillwater Knitting Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 2) 98 F. 2d 758, l. c. ....; Cupples Company Manufacturers v. NLRB, 106 F. 2d 100, l. c. 115; and Judge Riddick in his opinion in the court below (XIII, 54). See, also, Republic Aviation Corp. v. NLRB, 65 S. Ct. 982; NLRB v. American Pearl Button Co., (C. C. A. 8) 149 F. 2d 258, 259; NLRB v. Clinton Woolen Mfg. Co., 141 F. 2d 753 (headnote 2); and Jefferson Electric Co. v. NLRB, 102 F. 2d 949, l. c. 956.

The Board's finding that the employees were paid for time spent in attending union meetings is answered by our discussion of the finding that the March 18th and April 27th meetings were held "during working hours" (Point B-1, supra). Obviously, if the meetings were held after working hours, there would be no pay allowed—and it was so conceded at the trial (X, 3709): "Mr. Langsdale: It was never contended that any employee was paid for a meeting that started after working hours." All of the Respondent's witnesses who were permitted to testify, testified that they were not paid for attending any union meetings (X, 3711, 3718, 3723-4, 3728-9, 3732-3, 3738, 3742, 3744-5). Mr. Baty and Mrs. Copowicz testified there were no such allowances made (X, 3754, 3761-2). The early quitting hours, normally 3:50 to 4:10 (even with one hour overtime 4:50 to 5:10) shows there was no necessity for a meeting during working hours (II, 453-4). The testimony and offered testimony of the "1200" employees" is that all the meetings were held outside of working hours. We respectfully submit that the testimony of the Board's few witnesses to the contrary is inherently unreasonable and does not constitute "substantial" evidence in view of the overwhelming testimony of the employes.

We respectfully submit that for all seven of the reasons mentioned at the beginning of this discussion there is no substantial evidence to support a finding or conclusion that the respondent assisted or dominated the DGWU by virtue of the incidental, occasional and inconsequential use, without respondent's permission or knowledge, of respondent's "property and facilities" referred to by the Board, or thereby interfered with the employees in the selection or administration of the DGWU.

B-7.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to Prompt Recognition of, and Bargaining with, the DGWU Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The Board stresses the prompt recognition of the DGWU by respondent and the quick negotiation of agreements with the union as showing domination by respondent (X, 3878, footnote 47, 3882).

It is undisputed that nearly thirteen hundred employees joined the DGWU at the organization meeting on April 27, 1937, being practically all of the working employees, and that Rose Todd, chairman of the Executive Committee of the DGWU, presented evidence of this to Mrs. Reed on April 28, 1937 (I, 80a, 80b, 80c). Thereupon, it was respondent's immediate duty to recognize the DGWU, and to enter into bargaining negotiations with its committee. The Board's condemnation of respondent for complying with the law is unwarranted and demonstrates its bias and prejudice. Cupples Company Mfrs. v. NLRB, 106 F. 2d 100, l. c. 114; McQuay-Norris Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 7) 116 F. 2d 748, l. c. 751; NLRB v. Dahlstrom M. Door Co., 2 Cir., 112 F. 2d 756, 757; NLRB v. Piqua Munis- ing W. Prod. Co., 6 Cir., 109 F. 2d 552, 556; NLRB v. Clinton Woolen Mfg. Co., 6 Cir., 141 F. 2d 753, 756; NLRB v. Arma Corp., (C. C. A. 2) 122 F. 2d 153, 156; Foote Bros. Gear & Machine Corp. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 7) 114 F. 2d 611, l. c. 618; L. Greif & Bro. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 4) 108 F. 2d 551; NLRB v. Bradford Machine Tool Co., 138 F. 2d 246, 248.

We submit that the prompt recognition by respondent of the DGWU was eminently justified by the showing made, and that the 2-months' period thereafter taken to negotiate the contracts was not unduly "quick." Mrs. Reed's testimony (VII, 2097-2110) regarding Respondent's exhibit 17-A to 17-J, XI, 4105, shows genuine discussion of the contract submitted by the DGWU, and several members of the DGWU committee and several officials of the company testified to the genuineness of the negotiations (I, 123-24; II, 562-572, 704j-704m, 456-467, 432a-437).

B-8.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to the Terms of Working Agreements Between Respondent and the DGWU, Including the "Closed Shop" Provision, Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The Board finds (X, 3879-80) that the inclusion of certain provisions in the working agreements made between respondent and the DGWU shows domination and support of, and interference with, the DGWU by respondent. The Board apparently limits its criticism to two provisions: (1) the provision for a closed shop, and (2) the provision that the members of the executive or bargaining committee of the DGWU must be composed of employees with at least one year's employment in petitioner's plant.

The Board, in its previous decision, almost apologizes for its findings that these provisions show domination (A, 603):

The provisions criticised are not unusual or unique provisions in working contracts between unions and employers. Even if they were, there would be no justification for the Board's finding—the Trial Examiner repeatedly said during the hearing that the union could agree to any terms it saw fit—even to a minimum wage of $1.50 a week (I, 207). But, as stated, the provisions are not new or unusual—it so happens that the ILGWU itself puts such provisions in its contracts. To show this, respondent offered in evidence contracts made by the ILGWU with other garment manufacturers in the Kansas City area (Respondent's Exhibit 2—rejected, VI, 1653).

The Trial Examiner rejected these ILGWU contracts and refused to let respondent show such facts (II, 378hh-380; IX, 3270, 3274, 3782). The Board affirms this ruling, and then turns around and finds respondent guilty of violating the National Labor Relations Act because the DGWU agreed with respondent to the same kind of provisions that the ILGWU deems legal and proper and puts into its own agreements. This is another outstanding example of the bias of the Trial Examiner and Board against respondent.

The closed shop agreement was demanded by the DGWU (I, 90; II, 565, 704f). Mrs. Reed preferred an open shop (II, 704l; VII, 2095, 2097, 2387) and at first opposed the closed shop (II, 704l); but yielded on condition that it should not interfere with her choice in hiring employees (VII, 2097). That was entirely proper and is sanctioned by the Act itself.

B-9.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to the Appointment of Rose Todd, Mrs. Nichols and Miss Spalito on DGWU's Committee for Adjustment of Piece Work Prices Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The Board makes much of the fact that the DGWU designated Rose Todd, Mrs. Nichols and Miss Spalito as a committee to represent it in the adjustment of piece work prices, claiming that this shows domination of the DGWU by respondent because a part of Mrs. Nichols' and Miss Spalito's work for respondent is the setting of piece work prices.

There is no evidence that the DGWU appointed this committee at respondent's behest and the Board's conclusion is pure conjecture. The committee was appointed at a meeting of the group chairmen on June 3, 1937 (III, 923). There can be no reasonable doubt that these three persons were appointed by the DGWU because they were the best qualified members to serve in that capacity. Should a union appoint its least qualified members on its committees or its best qualified members? The answer is obvious. A part of Mrs. Nichols' and Miss Spalito's work for petitioner is the setting of piece work prices (II, 417-8), and Rose Todd having formerly done that work (I, 33), they were undoubtedly the best qualified persons to represent the union on that committee.

That the committee properly functioned in behalf of the DGWU and was not dominated by respondent, is conclusively shown by the evidence concerning the adjustment of complaints as to piece work prices. Rose Todd testified (I, 231-2, 234-238, incl., 929, 932, 936, 944) concerning the satisfactory adjustment of complaints of various operators as to piece work prices. At I, 238 Miss Todd testified concerning the satisfactory adjustment of many written complaints (contained in Intervener's Exhibits Nos. 15 to 15-BB).

The Respondent had no right to interfere with the DGWU in the handling of its internal affairs. If Respondent had interfered with the appointment of the union members which the DGWU wanted on its piece-work committee, the Labor Board would have jumped on it for so doing (Now, it seems to argue that respondent should have interfered).

According to the Board's theory, a union could never appoint any employee on any committee that has any dealing with the employer, for all employees "represent the employer" in some capacity, and hence the employer would be "sitting on both sides of the table." Certainly Congress did not contemplate that unions must place all negotiations between the union and the employer in the hands of "outsiders."

The cases cited by the Board at the top of page 69 are not applicable here. Those cases relate to an "entire union" or to the main "bargaining committee," not to a small sub-committee or shop committee, like the piece-work committee.

The Board says (p. 33) that Mrs. Nichols has "final authority" in setting piece work rates. This was not the testimony. She fixed the rates initially but if it was found they were not just, the rates were adjusted on complaints of operators or others (VII, 2144-2147; I, 231-238, 929, 936, 944). The Board's witness, Mrs. Skeens, testified that if a price was low on something "I would tell Mr. Baty that we needed more money on them" (IX, 3460) and that she thought "it was up to Mr. Baty to pass on grievances" (IX, 3461).

The evidence wholly fails to support the Board's findings on this matter.

B-10.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to Encouragement and Approval by Respondent of the April 23rd "Demonstrations," Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The complaint charged respondent with having instigated certain demonstrations in its plant against Sylvia Hull and Fern Sigler on April 23rd, 1937 (A, 452).

These demonstrations were caused by resentment of the employees, created by a news item in the press which falsely stated that Sylvia Hull was going to the ILGWU convention at Atlantic City as representative of the Donnelly employees (XI, 4171).

The Board virtually admits that respondent did not "instigate" these demonstrations when it says in its first decision (A, 581):

> "Without deciding whether the respondent was responsible for originating and inciting these anti-ILGWU demonstrations we are convinced that the respondent condoned, approved and encouraged them."

But the Board finds that the respondent "approved and encouraged" the demonstrations. This is in the teeth of the evidence. The Sylvia Hull demonstration occurred early in the morning, about eight o'clock, before Mr. Baty arrived at the plant. Mrs. Hyde, assistant to Mr. Baty, went to the scene, told the girls to go back to work, talked to Sylvia Hull and Sylvia volunteered to go home saying: "I will go home. I didn't know the girls felt this way about it, or I wouldn't have done it" (II, 536); and the girls had returned to work before Mr. Baty arrived at the plant (II, 496).

Furthermore, Mr. Baty upon his arrival took all necessary steps immediately. Mr. Baty testified:

"A. I went down to the sixth floor, the machine where Fern Sigler was working and got Fern Sigler to go to the office and at the same time I turned and instructed the girls to all get back to their machines and get to work" (II, 450).

This evidence certainly doesn't show "approval and encouragement"; instead, it shows that Mr. Baty and Mrs. Hyde stopped the demonstrations as soon as they reasonably could, and sent the girls back to work.

The Board complains that the demonstrators were not disciplined or reprimanded. As said by the Court in NLRB v. Asheville Hosiery Co., (C. C. A. 4) 108 F. 2d 288, l. c. 292:

> "No inference unfavorable to the management can reasonably be drawn from the fact that during the excitement then prevalent in the plant, the meeting was proposed until December 7, a few days after the ouster, or from the fact that the management undertook to prevent further violence, and to allay the resentment felt by a large majority of the employees, by persuasive methods rather than by disciplinary action."
>
> See, also, NLRB v. Clinton Woolen Mfg. Co., (6 Cir.) 141 F. 2d 753, 756.

The respondent's action must be viewed "in the light of all the surrounding circumstances," as said by the court in the Mathieson Alkali case, supra, l. c. 801-2, and when so viewed we submit that Mr. Baty's action was justified in every way and constituted no interference with the employees in their choice of a union.

The cases cited by the Board at page 51, footnote 13, all involved situations wholly different from the situation here, and hence are not applicable.

B-11.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions That Sylvia Hull Was Laid Off by Respondent Because of Her Union Activities and That the Respondent Thereby Interfered with the Rights of Its Employees Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The Board found that Sylvia Hull was temporarily laid off by respondent because of her union activities but found that respondent did not refuse to reinstate her (X, 3890).

The only point involved with reference to Sylvia Hull therefore is whether the respondent's action constituted an interference with the rights of employees in the free selection of bargaining representatives. We submit that such an inference under the state of facts disclosed is farfetched and unwarranted. In the first place, she volunteered to go home after the demonstration of employees. The testimony of Mrs. Hyde was (II, 536) that the girls said they would return to work as soon as they heard Sylvia say she was going to go home, at which time Sylvia did say "I will go home. I didn't know the girls felt this way about it, or I wouldn't have done it."

In the second place, her lay off, if it be deemed a lay off (which we deny), was only for a day and the following day respondent tried to call her back to the plant. That counteracted any adverse inference that might have been drawn because of her leaving (or lay off).

In the next place, the evidence clearly shows that the employees' attitude against Sylvia Hull and the ILGWU was already fixed prior to her leaving.

The article in the paper and Sylvia Hull's conduct at the plant were planned by the ILGWU as a part of its conspiracy. The primary responsibility for the acts of the employees, therefore, rests upon Meyer Perlstein and Sylvia Hull, who caused the false notice to appear. Nothing that Respondent did, or failed to do, added one whit to the employees' feelings or action with respect to the ILGWU. It is wholly unrealistic and unjust to attempt to pin on Respondent the responsibility for something that rests first on Perlstein and Hull and secondly on the employees themselves.

As was said by the Court in NLRB v. Asheville Hosiery Co., (C. C. A. 4) 108 F. 2d 288, l. c. 291-292:

> "Evidence of the most convincing kind shows that the misrepresentations and threats above referred to had stirred up violent resentment on the part of a majority of the workers against those who favored the Union. * * *
>
> "There is no substantial ground for the rejection of the overwhelming evidence that the hostile attitude of the great majority of the workers toward the Union proceeded from their sincere and spontaneous dislike of outside interference; and it is not enough to say that the management shared this feeling and manifested it in the statements of its supervisory officials."

B-12.

The Board's Findings and Conclusions As to Coercion and Interference, Based on Respondent's Alleged Hostility Toward ILGWU Are Not Supported by the Evidence.

The respondent's alleged "hostility" toward the ILGWU has been purely defensive, directed not against employees' membership in the ILGWU, but to prevent violence at the plant and the unlawful secondary boycott which the ILGWU was conducting—the existence of which has been definitely found by three Federal Judges. See Mrs. Reed's testimony, VII, 2073-4, 2090, 2148-9.

The Board rejected much of Respondent's evidence relating to the alleged 1934-35 activities on which the Board bases its findings of hostilities. This has been discussed in Part One of our brief, under point I (3). Even so, we submit that the evidence does not support the Board's prejudicial findings that because of respondent's alleged "hostility" toward the ILGWU, the employees have been coerced or interfered with in their free choice of a labor union.

B-13.

The Board's Findings and Order As to Refund of Checked-Off Dues, Are Contrary to the Evidence and the Law.

The Board's finding that "the company agreed, at the request of the DGWU, to a check-off * * *" (X, 3880), is absolutely unsupported by the evidence.

The undisputed testimony shows that Respondent refused the DGWU's request for a check-off (R. I, 226-7, 131-2). Later employees individually requested in writing that respondent deduct from their pay their respective union dues. Respondent complied with the said individual requests (R. 277). No monies have ever been deducted from an employee's pay without the express authorization of said employee. Respondent has no agreement with the DGWU nor has it ever had with respect to a check-off (I, 132).

The Board's finding is thus in the teeth of the evidence, and is a typical example of the warping and distortion of the evidence in the Board's findings.

The Board's order of reimbursement of checked-off dues, under the circumstances here shown, is contrary to law, first, because the DGWU was not a company-dominated union, and secondly, because the employes individually and without any compulsion asked the company to check off their dues.

The present state of the law on this subject appears to be as follows:

In Virginia Electric and Power Co. v. NLRB, 319 U. S. 533, the court in footnote 1 states that five of the Circuit Courts of Appeal have refused to enforce reimbursement of check-off dues. This Court in the Virginia Electric case enforced the order of reimbursement but in doing so expressly stated that it was deciding "only the case before us," and sustained the order of reimbursement "under the circumstances here disclosed" (l. c. 545).

There was a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Roberts in which the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Jackson joined. Mr. Justice Frankfurter, in concurring with the majority, stated that > "if the controlling facts in this case were like those in Western Union Tel. Co. v. NLRB, (C. C. A. 2) 113 F. 2d 992, I too would accept the reasoning of Judge Learned Hand's opinion in that case and join my brother Roberts. But the vital difference between the Western Union and this case is that in the former 'there was no evidence that all those (employees) who asked to have their wages stopped, did so in any part because they were coerced.' Id., 997. Here the employees had no such choice; they could avoid the check-off of union dues only by giving up their jobs" (l. c. 545).

In the majority opinion the Court stated the basis for sustaining the order for reimbursement as follows:

> "The result was that the employees, under the I. O. E. by-laws had to authorize wage deductions for dues to remain members of the I. O. E. and they had to remain members to retain their jobs" (l. c. 540).

No such situation exists in the case at bar. If any member did not want his dues checked-off by the company, all he had to do was to say so. He could not be expelled from the union or lose his job for taking such position. In fact there was no penalty or coercion of any kind—it was purely a personal matter with each employee whether he paid his dues direct to the union or had the company deduct it and pay the union. Like any other such authority, the direction to check-off the dues may be revoked by any or all employees at any time, without

As the respondent did not seek the check-off, there is no basis to assume that respondent sought by such means to control the DGWU. For that reason and under all the circumstances existing here, the Board's order for reimbursement of dues is not remedial but is punitive and goes beyond the purpose of the Act or the power of the Board (NLRB v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U. S. 426, l. c. 437).

The facts in the case at bar take it out of the holding in the Virginia Electric Power case, and bring it within the exception therein referred to by Mr. Justice Frankfurter and within the rulings in the Western Union case and other similar cases denying reimbursement.

B-14.

The Board's Findings, Conclusions and Order Are Contrary to the Authorities.

Numerous cases hold that circumstances similar to, but stronger than, those relied on by the Board in the case at bar were insufficient to support the Board's findings and conclusions:

NLRB v. Clinton Woolen Mfg. Co., 141 F. 2d 753; NLRB v. J. L. Brandeis & Sons, 145 F. 2d 556; Commonwealth Edison Co. v. NLRB, 135 F. 2d 891; NLRB v. Sun Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., 135 F. 2d 15; NLRB v. Union Mfg. Co., 124 F. 2d 332, 333; NLRB v. Sparks-Withington Co., 119 F. 2d 78; NLRB v. Riverside Mfg. Co., 119 F. 2d 302; Diamond-T Motor Co. v. NLRB, 119 F. 2d 978; Quaker State Oil Ref. Corp. v. NLRB, 119 F. 2d 631; NLRB

v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., 140 F. 2d 217; Boeing Airplane Co. v. NLRB, 140 F. 2d 423; NLRB v. Brown-Brockmeyer Co., 143 F. 2d 537; Schweitzer, Inc., v. NLRB, (C. C. A., District of Columbia) 144 F. 2d 520.

CONCLUSION.

The employees here had the union of their unanimous choice; the employer had complied with the Act and bargained with the representatives selected by the employees. Harmonious labor relations existed and interstate commerce was not impeded. This court, like the court below, should uphold the rights of employees to have the union of their choice, and should protect the employer who seeks to comply with the provisions of the Act and the holdings of this court, by dealing only with the representatives selected by a majority of its employees.

Respondent respectfully submits that the judgment below should be affirmed or the petitions for certiorari dismissed.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBT. J. INGRAHAM,
BURR S. STOTTLE,
Attorneys for Petitioner, Donnelly Garment Company.

REED, INGRAHAM & MILLIGAN,
Of Counsel.

FILE COPY

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1945

No. 787 39

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS UNION,

Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT AND BRIEF IN SUPPORT THEREOF.

CLIF LANGSDALE,
CLYDE TAYLOR,
Counsel for Petitioner.

INDEX

Subject Index

	Page
Petition for writ of certiorari	1
Opinion below	2
Jurisdiction	2
Summary statement of the matter involved	2
Nature of proceeding below	2
Course of litigation	3
Ground on which the Court of Appeals in this case set aside the Board's order	4
Premises on which the Court based its decision of lack of due process	4
The factual aspect of the case. Factually the record supports the Board's findings. This is conceded by the opinions	10
Questions presented	11
Reasons relied on for the allowance of the writ	14
Conclusion	15
Brief in support of petition	17
Specification of errors intended to be urged	18
(a) Error of the Court in weighing evidence	18
(b) Error of the Court in holding that rejection of given evidence denied due process	21
(c) and (d) Error in holding due process was denied by reason of disqualification of examiner	22
(e) Error of Court in holding specified rejected evidence was admissible	22
(f) Error in treating jurisdiction in review of proceedings of administrative boards as co-extensive with jurisdiction in appeal from court to court	23
Argument—The argument is in six divisions, which follow the same order as questions presented	24

Table of Cases Cited

	Page
American Enka Corp. v. NLRB, 119 Fed. (2d) 60 (4 C. C. A.)	20
Berger v. U. S., 255 U. S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230	22, 29
Bethlehem Steel Co. v. NLRB, 120 Fed. (2d) 641, 651, 653 (App. D. C.)	23
Boeing Airplane Co. v. NLRB, 140 Fed. (2d) 423 (10 C. C. A.)	19
Cupples Co. v. NLRB (8th Cir.), 106 Fed. (2d) 100, 113	20
Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheaton 518, l. c. 581 (Webster's Argument)	26, 30
Donnelly Garment Co. v. NLRB, 123 Fed. (2d) 215	2, 3
Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 308 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437	22, 24, 27
Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 S. Ct. 446	22, 24, 27
Gannon v. Laclede Gas Co., 145 Mo. 502, 46 S. W. 968	19, 25
Goldstein v. U. S. (8th Cir.), 63 Fed. (2d) 609, 612, 614	9
Greenport Basin & Construction Co. v. NLRB, 132 Fed. (2d) 857 (2 C. C. A.)	20
Hill v. Florida, 65 S. Ct. 1273—June 15, 1945	28
Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. NLRB, 140 Fed. (2d) 777 (5 C. C. A.)	20
I. A. of M. v. NLRB, 110 Fed. (2d) 29 (D. C. C. C. A.), l. c. 35, affirmed 311 U. S. 72, 61 S. Ct. 83	21
Montgomery Ward & Co. v. NLRB, 107 Fed. (2d) 555 (7 C. C. A.)	20
Morgan v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773	21, 25
NLRB v. Virginia Elec. & Power Co., 314 U. S. 469, 62 S. Ct. 344, l. c. 348	19
NLRB v. Link-Belt Co., 311 U. S. 584, 61 S. Ct. 358	19
NLRB v. Hearst Publications, Inc., 322 U. S. 111, 64 S. Ct. 851	19
NLRB v. Nevada Consolidated Copper Corp., 316 U. S. 106, 62 S. Ct. 960	19
NLRB v. Independent Union of Craftsmen, 311 U. S. 584, 61 S. Ct. 358	19

Page

NLRB v. Waterman S. S. Corp., 309 U. S. 206, 60 S. Ct. 493 19

NLRB v. Southern Bell Telephone Co., 319 U. S. 50, 63 S. Ct. 905 19, 20

NLRB v. Remington Rand, Inc., 130 Fed. (2d) 919 (2 C. C. A.) 20

NLRB v. Bradford Dyeing Assoc., 310 U. S. 318, 60 S. Ct. 918 22, 24, 27

NLRB v. Aintree Corp., 132 Fed. (2d) 469, 472 (7 C. C. A.) 23

NLRB v. Engraving Co., 123 Fed (2d) 589, 593 (7 C. C. A.) 23

NLRB v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9 23

New Idea v. NLRB, 117 Fed. (2d) 517 (7 C. C. A.) 20, 23

O'Malley v. U. S., 128 Fed. (2d) 676 (8 C. C. A.) 22, 29

Oughton v. NLRB, 118 Fed. (2d) 486 (3 C. C. A.) 20

Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Co. v. Federal Power Comm., 143 Fed. 2d) 488 (8 C. C. A.) 21

Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Co., 124 Fed. (2d) 440 22, 29

Ryan v. U. S., 99 Fed. (2d) 864 22, 29

Swift & Co. v. NLRB, 106 Fed. (2d) 87 (10 C. C. A.) 20

Walker v. U. S., 116 Fed. (2d) 458 (9 C. C. A.) 22, 29

Wilson & Co. v. NLRB, 124 Fed. (2d) 845 (7 C. C. A.); 50 NLRB 241, 151 Fed. (2d) 845 20

STATUTES CITED

240 Judicial Code, 43 Stat. 938, Title 28, Sec. 347 U. S. C. A. 2

National Labor Relations Act, Title 29, Secs. 154, 155, U. S. C. A. 12, 22, 28

National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 449, paragraphs (e) and (f), Section 160 12, 14, 18, 19, 24

National Labor Relations Act, Section 160, Paragraph B 21

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1945

No. 787

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS UNION,

Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, A CORPORATION, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD,

Respondents

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

To the Honorable Harlan Fiske Stone, Chief Justice of the United States, and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Petitioner, International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, prays that a writ of certiorari be issued to review the judgment of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit, entered on October 29, 1945, which set aside and for naught held the findings and order of the National Labor Relations Board (50 N. L. R. B. 241) in a review proceeding by said Court of Appeals, under the provisions of National Labor Relations Act.

Opinion Below

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit, sought to be reviewed, is reported in 151 Federal Reporter, 2d Series, 854 (Advance Sheets January 14, 1946).

Jurisdiction

The petition for certiorari has been timely filed. The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, sought to be reviewed, was rendered October 29, 1945. No motion for rehearing was filed. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240 Judicial Code, 43 Stat. 938, Title 28, Section 347 U. S. C. A.

Summary Statement of the Matter Involved

I

Nature of Proceeding Below

The proceeding below was upon the petition of the Donnelly Garment Company, called the Employer, to review and set aside an order of the National Labor Relations Board entered June 9, 1943 (50 N. L. R. B. 241), requiring the dis-establishment of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, called the Company Union, and the abrogation of its contracts with the Employer. The Board, in its answer, prayed the Court to enforce said order. The Company Union and the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union (called the International Union, the Petitioner in this court) intervened.

II

Course of Litigation

There had been a previous hearing before the Board resulting in a similar finding and order, which were set aside by the Court of Appeals in Donnelly Garment Com- pany v. National Labor Relations Board, 123 F. (2d) 215. That decision held that the order was void for lack of due process in that the Trial Examiner had excluded testimony of employees, members of the Company Union, in substance and to the effect that such employees had joined the Union of their own free will and without coercion or other unlawful conduct upon the part of the Employer.

(This is called the Employees' Testimony.) That order recited:

> "We think that the least that the Board can do in order to cure the defects in its procedure, caused by the failure of the Trial Examiner to receive admissible evidence, is to vacate the order and the findings and the conclusions upon which it is based; to accord to the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner; and to receive and consider such evidence, together with all other competent and material evidence in the record, before making new findings and a new order." 123 Fed. 2d l.c. 225.

Accordingly the Board set aside its order and sent the matter back to the Trial Examiner to receive and consider the excluded evidence. The Trial Examiner received, considered and weighed, and the Board considered and weighed, such evidence formerly excluded. It is beyond question, in fact the Court of Appeals in this case holds, that such employees' evidence, rejected in the first hearing, had in the second hearing been received and that the Trial Examiner committed no error in his rulings as to the admission of such evidence.

III

Ground on Which the Court of Appeals in this Case Set Aside the Board's Order

There is but one ultimate ground on which the order was set aside, which is for want of due process in the proceedings upon which the order was based.

> "On Consideration Whereof, It is now here Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed by this Court That the prayer of the National Labor Relations Board for a decree of this Court enforcing the order under review is hereby denied for want of due process in the proceedings upon which the order is based, and said order is hereby set aside." (Court of Appeals Decree, October 29, 1945.) (Vol. XIII, R. 71.)

IV

Premises on Which the Court Based Its Decision of Lack of Due Process

While the sole ground for setting aside the order was lack of due process, the opinion specifies several premises from which it draws such conclusion. Of these seriatim.

A

The opinions hold that due process was denied because, while the employees' testimony was received and there was no error in the receipt or rejection thereof, yet the Board did not give the consideration thereof, or probative value thereto, which the Court of Appeals believed such testimony was entitled to have.

In conclusion of the division of the opinions dealing with this subject these opinions state:

> "It seems to us that the Company and the Plant Union are justified in contending that the evidence of > the employees tending to show lack of domination and interference by the Company received no difference or greater consideration upon the second hearing than it did upon the first, and that it was disregarded in both hearings."

Again, Judge Reddick, upon this branch of the case, stated:

> "I think it clear beyond question that there was denial of due process in the hearing before the Board, because of the Board's refusal to give any weight to some of the material evidence received, as well as because of its refusal to hear material evidence offered by the Garment Company and the Plant Union" (Vol. XIII, R. 55.)

The Trial Examiner in his report stated (Vol. X, 3848):

> "The undersigned accorded the respondent and the D.G.W.U. an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected at the prior hearing. * * * Upon the record thus made and from his observation of the witnesses, the undersigned makes, in addition to the foregoing, the following findings of fact."

Here follow the findings that the Employer had been guilty of unfair labor practices as charged.

The Board in its decision and order of June 9, 1943 (Vol. A, 619), stated:

> "The Board has considered the intermediate reports the exceptions and briefs, and the entire record in the case, and hereby adopts the findings, conclusions and recommendations made by the Trial examiner, with the exceptions and qualifications noted below: In remanding the case to the Board for further hearing the Circuit Court directed that the respondent and the D.G.W.U. be permitted to adduce the previously proffered testimony of respondent's employees to show in substance that they were not influenced, > interfered with, or coerced, by their bargaining representative. In compliance with the Court's mandate and pursuant to the respective offers of proof submitted by the respondent and the D.G.W.U. at the original hearing the Board has permitted the introduction of such testimony. We have carefully considered all such evidence adduced by the respondent and the D.G.W.U. We find, however, that the testimony in question does not overcome more postive evidence in the record that the respondent committed acts of interference and assistance in the formation and administration of the D.G.W.U., which subjected that organization to the respondent's domination and which removed from the employees' selection of the D.G.W.U. the complete freedom of choice which the Act contemplates. * * * Consideration of all the evidence convinces us and we find that the respondent dominated and interfered with, restrained and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act" ((Vol. XIII, p. 25.)

The court decision in this respect is not based on the rejection of the employees' evidence, but is based squarely upon what the Court conceived the Board did with such evidence after it was received. It was the failure of the Board to give what the Court conceived was the proper weight to the evidence, that constituted denial of due process.

Judge Sanborn states that the employees' evidence "received no different or greater consideration upon the second hearing than it did upon the first and that it was disregarded in both hearings." Judge Reddick says that there was denial of due process because of the Board's "refusal to give any weight to some of the material evidence received." The Court in this respect did weigh the evidence and did set aside the order of the Board because the Court's opinion differed from the Board's opinion on whether such evidence was entitled to any weight when considered in light of the entire record and more positive evidence therein to the contrary.

B

The Court held that the ruling of the Trial Examiner, excluding several items of evidence tendered by the Employer, denied to the Employer due process of law. These items are as follows:

(1) The International Union contended that certain provisions of the contract between the Employer and the Company Union constituted unfair labor practice. The Examiner excluded certain evidence to the effect that the International Union had entered into contracts with various other employers containing provisions similar to the provisions of the contract between the Company and the Company Union.

(2) It was contended before the Examiner that certain employees were supervisory employees so that their conduct was binding upon the employer. The Examiner excluded evidence tending to show that the International Union admitted to membership at other plants employees holding similar positions.

(3) The Trial Examiner excluded evidence proffered by the Company to show that the International Union had conducted a secondary boycott of the Company's products, conducted violent strikes at other plants and threatened to conduct such a strike at the Company's plant unless the Company signed a closed shop contract with it.

(4) There was evidence to show that in 1935 there had been an uncompleted hearing before the N.R.A. Board and that the Company had discriminated against employees whose discharges were the subject of such hearing before the N.R.A. Board. At the second hearing the Company sought to introduce evidence that it had not discriminated against employees whose discharges were the subject of inquiry before the N.R.A. In the first hearing the Examiner did, in fact, receive all evidence offered by the Company on this subject. At the second hearing the Examiner refused to receive additional evidence upon that subject. None of the additional evidence was claimed to have been unavailable at the time of the first hearing.

The Court held that the exclusion of the foregoing items constituted a denial of due process to the Company and for that reason the Court set aside the findings and order of the Board.

C

The Court held that the Employer was deprived of due process of law because the Board refused to designate a Trial Examiner for the second hearing other than the one who conducted the first hearing.

It was contended by the Employer in the first case that the Company had been deprived of due process of law because of the prejudice of the Trial Examiner. The Court, in its first decision, 123 Fed. 2d, l.c. 219, decided that there was no such bias and prejudice on the part of the Trial Examiner as to constitute a denial of due process. The Court said:

> "We think that it cannot be said that it appears from the record of the proceedings before the Examiner and before the Board that there was a denial of due process because of bias and prejudice or collusion. If, as petitioners contend, the Trial Examiner and the Board ruled erroneously with respect to the issues to be tried, or in the exclusion of evidence, and drew unwarranted inferences from the evidence adduced, that would not justify a conclusion that either the Examiner or the Board was prejudiced or deliberately unfair. That the Examiner made comments which might better have been omitted, with respect to the attitude of the petitioner's witnesses, or of the character of their testimony, is not enough to show a denial of due process. Compare Cupples Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 8th Cir. 106 Fed. 2d 100, 113; Goldstein vs. United States, 8th Cir. 63 Fed. 2d 609, 612, 614." Donnelly Garment Co. vs. National Labor Relations Board, 123 Fed. 2d 215, l.c. 219.

The record on the second hearing is devoid of any action on the part of the Trial Examiner that could conceivably have been evidence of bias or prejudice. The opinion in this case concedes the good faith and honesty of decision both to the Examiner and the Board. The opinion states:

> "We think however, that a ruling by this Court that the proceedings of the Board lack due process because the alleged bias and prejudice against the Company and the Plant Union is not justified" (Vol. XIII, R. 40.)

The sole basis of the decision setting aside the Board's order because of its refusal to appoint another Examiner, is that the Examiner in the first hearing excluded the employees' evidence because he was then convinced, and so ruled, that such evidence was not admissible and was then by him "considered to be of no value or materiality." The record shows that after the Court of Appeals had held that such evidence was admissible the Trial Examiner accepted such ruling and did receive the evidence and did consider it. Nor is there anything in the record nor in the opinion to indicate that the Examiner at the second hearing was swayed as to the admissibility, or value, of such evidence by reason of the fact that prior to the Court's decision in the first case the Examiner had conceived and held that such evidence was not admissible. The opinion means that, solely because an Examiner at a prior hearing believed and ruled that given evidence was inadmissible, such Examiner by reason of such ruling was so disqualified as to further hearings as to render any such further hearing before him devoid of due process.

V

THE FACTUAL ASPECT OF THE CASE. FACTUALLY THE RECORD SUPPORTS THE BOARD'S FINDINGS. THIS IS CONCEDED BY THE OPINIONS.

The opinion makes exceedingly clear that from a factual standpoint there was substantial and sufficient evidence to show that the Company was guilty of the unfair labor practices charged.

The opinion states that there are two factual pictures each supported by substantial evidence in the record. One picture is that the Employer had fostered, dominated and supported a company union and the Employer had entered into a closed shop agreement with such union for the purpose of assisting the Company Union, which is a picture of unfair labor practice. The other picture is that of a group of employees on friendly terms with the employer, satisfied with wages and working conditions, desiring to avoid strikes and labor trouble, formed for their own protection, and completely independent of the employer, which is not a picture of unfair labor practice.

The Board ruled that the picture disclosing unfair labor practice was the true picture, and that the picture as presented by the Employer and the Company Union was not a true picture.

Judge Sanborn's opinion contains the following:

> "The picture drawn by the International and the Board is that of an employer which, solely because of hostility to the International, has influenced and coerced its employees into forming a plant Union and entering into a closed shop agreement, thus depriving them of their freedom of action and choice and making them in effect the bond servants of their employer." (Vol. XIII, R. 37.)

(Manifestly, if this is a true picture the Board was justified from a factual standpoint in making the order in question.)

The opinion continues:

> "The picture which the company and the plant union present is that of a group of employees, on friendly terms with their employer, satisfied with their wage and working conditions, and desirous of avoiding strikes and labor troubles, who, upon the advice of their counsel and for their own protection against an unjustified and unlawful attempt by the International to force them to become, and to force their employer to make them become, members of that union against their will, voluntarily formed and have satisfactorily administered their own completely independent union.
>
> The question as to which is the true picture insofar as that presents a question of fact is not a matter with which this court can concern itself." (Vol. XIII, R. 37.)

It is therefore beyond dispute that the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals cannot be justified because of failure of proof by substantial and sufficient evidence showing violations of the National Labor Relations Act justifying the order of the Board.

Questions Presented

One

Where, in a review proceeding under the National Labor Relations Act, certain evidence has been received by the Board and the Board, in its findings, declares that it has "permitted the introduction of such testimony", and has "carefully considered all such evidence", whether the Court of Appeals has jurisdiction to set aside the findings and order of the Board because the Court is convinced that, notwithstanding such declaration by the Board, yet the Board did not give to such testimony so received the consideration and the weight which the Court believes it should have received—all this where admittedly there was substantial and sufficient evidence to support the findings of the Board. Is such ruling beyond the jurisdiction of the Court to review findings of the Board granted and limited by the National Labor Relations Act? Para. (e) and (f) Section 160, Title 29 U. S. C. A.

Two

Whether, in a review proceeding under the National Labor Relations Act, the Court has jurisdiction to set aside the findings and order of the Board because of the rejection of evidence before the Examiner, on the grounds that such action by the Examiner constitutes a denial of due process, except in cases where the rejected evidence is direct, fundamental and vital—not incidental or collateral to the primary issues involved. Is the inherent power of the Court to protect the constitutional right to fair trial, as regards that receipt of evidence by an administrative board, coextensive with the court's authority to grant new trial in an appeal from court to court in a purely judicial proceeding?

Three

Is the Court of Appeals authorized to set aside the findings and order of the Board, on the ground of denial of due process of law, because the Court is of the opinion that the Trial Examiner was disqualified to conduct the hearing, when Congress has imposed in the Board the authority to appoint such examiners and has made the Board judge of their qualifications? (Title 29, Sections 154, 155, U. S. C. A.)

FOUR

If the Court is authorized under any circumstances in setting aside the findings and order of the Board because the Court is of the opinion that the Trial Examiner was disqualified, then is the Court justified in so doing upon the following facts:

When in a previous hearing before the Examiner he excluded certain evidence, called employees evidence, stating that he was convinced that the same was immaterial, inadmissible and entitled to no weight. Where the Court, in a previous review, declared that such evidence was competent and entitled to consideration and remanded the proceeding for the receipt thereof. Where the Trial Examiner in the second hearing did receive all such evidence, formerly excluded, and where, in this case, the Court has held that the Examiner committed no error in his rulings concerning the receipt of such testimony. Where there is nothing in the record nor opinion to indicate that the Examiner at the second hearing was swayed as to the admissibility of such evidence by reason of the fact that prior to the Court's decision in the first case the Examiner conceived and held that such evidence was not admissible. Was the Court, under the foregoing condition of the record, justified in holding that the Examiner was disqualified by reason of his rulings in the first hearing, and in holding, by reason thereof, the findings and order of the Board should be set aside?

FIVE

Whether the evidence excluded by the Examiner, specified in paragraphs (1), (2), (3) and (4), of Division B, of the Summary Statement, was admissible in any event and whether the exclusion thereof would justify a court in reversing the judgment, even in a judicial proceeding upon appeal from court to court.

SIX

Whether the Court of Appeals has not treated its jurisdiction to review findings and order of an administrative Board, as co-extensive with its judicial authority to review legal proceedings as upon appeal from court to court. Whether the Court of Appeals has not far exceeded its jurisdiction to review an action by an administrative Board, as specified and limited by paragraphs (e) and (f), Section 160, Title 29, U. S. C. A. Whether in any event the Court has not confused and confounded judicial power to review actions of an administrative Board, with the jurisdiction on appeal from court to court, to such a degree as to leave the legal situation intolerable.

Reasons Relied On for the Allowance of the Writ

There are special and important reasons for this Court to exercise its sound judicial discretion and grant the writ.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has rendered a decision in conflict with the decisions of other Circuit Courts of Appeal.

The Court of Appeals has decided a federal question in a way probably in conflict with applicable decisions of this court.

The Court of Appeals has so far departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings concerning the review by the federal courts of actions by administrative boards, as to call for an exercise of this Court's power of supervision.

The Court of Appeals has extended its jurisdiction to review proceedings by administrative boards so as to be practically co-extensive with the jurisdiction of that court to review decisions of lower courts upon appeal in ordinary legal proceedings. The demarcation between the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals in the two kinds of proceedings should again be made clear by the Supreme Court, through certiorari in this case.

The reasons relied upon for the allowance of the writ are specified and amplified and applied to the record in the Brief accompanying this Petition, but which, for the sake of brevity, are not here repeated.

Conclusion

Wherefore and by reason of all which the petitioner respectfully prays that this Court shall issue its writ of certiorari to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

CLIF LANGSDALE,
CLYDE TAYLOR,
Attorneys for Petitioner,
International Ladies' Garment Workers Union.

Address of Attorneys:

922 Scarritt Building,
Kansas City, Missouri.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1945

No. 787

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS UNION,

Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, A CORPORATION, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, Respondents.

BRIEF OF PETITIONER INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS UNION, IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

I

The Petition for the writ of certiorari contains, so that there is not here repeated, the following:

A. Reference to the official report of the decision below.

B. Statement of the grounds on which the jurisdiction of this court is invoked.

C. A concise statement of the case containing all that is material to the consideration of the questions presented.

D. Questions presented.

E. Reasons relied on for the issuance of the writ:

II

There is in this brief presented:

(a) A specification of the assigned errors intended to be urged;

(b) further specifications of the grounds and reasons for the court to exercise its discretion for the issuance of the writ, supporting citations and application thereof to the record herein;

(c) argument.

III

Specification of Errors Intended to Be Urged

A

The Court, in conflict with decisions of other Courts of Appeal and of the Supreme Court, and in violation of the National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 449, and particularly paragraphs (e) and (f) Section 160, has weighed the Employees' Testimony and set aside the order of the Board because the Court was of the opinion that the Board did not give to the Employees' Testimony the consideration and weight the Court deemed it entitled to have. What weight, if any, when considered in light of the entire record, the Employees' Testimony was entitled to have, was for the Board alone. The Court may not directly or indirectly enter that field, all the way in, or at all. The Board's power to weigh evidence is the power to reject, because not believed, in part or in toto. Even uncontradicted evidence is not proof until it is accepted as proof by the triers of fact. (Gannon v. Laclede Gas Co., 145 Mo. 502, 46 S. W. 968.)

In the particular above specified the decision is in conflict with National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 449, and particularly paragraph (e) Section 160. "The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive," and paragraph (f), "and the findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive."

Such decision in said particular is also in conflict with the following decisions by the Supreme Court and by the various Circuit Courts of Appeal.

The decision is in conflict with the following decisions by the United States Supreme Court and the various Circuit Courts of Appeal:

National Labor Relations Board v. Virginia Electric & Power Company, 314 U. S. 469, 62 S. Ct. 344, l. c. 348;

National Labor Relations Board v. Link-Belt Company, 311 U. S. 584, 61 S. Ct. 358;

National Labor Relations Board v. Hearst Publications, Inc., 322 U. S. 111, 64 S. Ct. 851;

National Labor Relations Board v. Nevada Consolidated Copper Corp. 316 U. S. 105, 62 S. Ct. 960;

National Labor Relations Board v. Independent Union of Craftsmen, 311 U. S. 584, 61 S. Ct. 358;

Boeing Airplane Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 140 Fed. (2d) 423 (10 C. C. A.);

National Labor Relations Board v. Waterman S. S. Corp., 309 U. S. 206, 60 S. Ct. 493;

National Labor Relations Board v. Southern Bell Telephone Company, 319 U. S. 50, 63 S. Ct. 905.

Where the Board's finding is based upon reasonable inference, the court cannot interfere upon the ground that the opposite inference could have as reasonably been drawn.

National Labor Relations Board v. Southern Association Bell Telephone Employees, 319 U. S. 50, 63 S. Ct. 905;

Montgomery Ward & Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 107 Fed. (2d) 555 (7 C. C. A.);

Wilson & Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 124 Fed. (2d) 845 (7 C. C. A.);

Swift & Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 Fed. (2d) 87 (10 C. C. A.);

The credibility of witnesses is exclusively for the Board.

Greenport Basin & Construction Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 132 Fed. (2d) 857 (2 C. C. A.); Oughton v. National Labor Relations Board, 118 Fed. (2d) 486 (3 C. C. A.);

American Enka Corporation v. National Labor Relations Board, 119 Fed. (2d) 60 (4 C. C. A.); Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 140 Fed. (2d) 777 (5 C. C. A.);

New Idea v. National Labor Relations Board, 117 Fed. (2d) 517 (7 C. C. A.);

Cupples Company v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 Fed. (2d) 100 (8 C. C. A.); Swift & Company v. National Labor Relations Board, 106 Fed. (2d) 87 (10 C. C. A.).

The finding of the Board may be based upon hearsay testimony where it is the kind on which reasonable men are accustomed to rely.

National Labor Relations Board v. Remington Rand, Inc., 130 Fed. (2d) 919 (2 C. C. A.);

I. A. of M. v. National Labor Relations Board, 110 Fed. (2d) 29, (D. C. C. C. A.), l. c. 35, affirmed 311 U. S. 72, 61 S. Ct. 83;

The ordinary rules of evidence are not controlling in proceedings of the Board. "In any such proceeding the rules of evidence prevailing in courts of law or equity shall not be controlling." (N. L. R. B. Sec. 160, Par. B.)

The Board has the authority to fix its own standards of proof. The Board may choose the criteria determinative of an issue of fact, it may reject evidence which has no materiality in view of the criteria adopted, and under those circumstances, the rejection of such evidence is not a denial of due process of law. (Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Co. v. Federal Power Comm., 143 Fed. (2d) 488 (8 C. C. A.))

The Court undertook in conflict with Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773, to go into the mental processes of the Board in arriving at its conclusions.

B

The Lower Court erred in holding that the rejection by the Examiner of four items of evidence described and identified in detail in subdivision B of division IV of the Summary Statement, denied to the Employer due process of law. None of such evidence was vital, controlling or immediately related to the primary issues in the case. It was collateral, secondary and had to do with "imponderables". Such ruling was at most a mere procedural error. Its rejection, even if erroneous, could not constitute denial of fair trial nor due process. Fair trial based upon due process means a trial under law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds on inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. Mere procedural error in the receipt or rejection of evidence, does not violate the requirements of fair trial within the meaning of due process of law, National Labor Relations Board v. Bradford Dyeing Association, 310 U. S. 318, 60 S. Ct. 918, and particularly is the decision below in conflict with Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Company, 308 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437 and Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 S. Ct. 146.

C and D

The Lower Court erred in holding that the Employer was deprived of due process of law by reason of the refusal of the Board to appoint an Examiner other than the Examiner who heard the first proceeding. The National Labor Relations Act empowers the Board to appoint the Examiners and makes the Board the judge of their qualifications. Moreover, even if the Court had the judicial authority to review the action of the Board in the appointment of an examiner, the Examiner was not disqualified. The Lower Court held that neither he nor the Board were prejudiced. The fact that in the first hearing the Examiner then ruled that the Employees' Testimony was immaterial and without weight and therefore excluded, did not disqualify the Examiner who obeyed the ruling of the Court and admitted the evidence.

National Labor Relations Act Title 29, Section 154, 155;
Walker v. United States, 116 Fed. (2d) 458;
Ryan v. United States, 99 Fed. (2d) 864;
Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Co., 124 Fed. (2d) 440;
O'Malley v. United States, 128 Fed. (2d) 676;
Berger v. United States, 235 U.S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230.

E

The Court erred in holding that the evidence specified in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of division B of the Summary Statement was admissible. Such evidence would have been inadmissible even in the trial of a suit at law. The ruling of the Court in this respect is in conflict with the following decisions:

(1) The Board properly excluded evidence which the Company sought to introduce to show that the International Union had entered into contracts with various employers containing provisions similar to those of the contract between the Company and the Company Union. (Bethlehem Steel Company v. National Labor Relations Board, 120 Fed. (2d) 641, 651, 653. (App. D. C.))

(2) The Board properly excluded the proffered testimony that the International Union admitted to membership at other plants employees holding positions similar to employees of the Company, which were claimed to be supervisory so that their acts bound the employer.

National Labor Relations Board v. Aintree Corp., 132 Fed. (2d) 469, 472 (7 C. C. A.); National Labor Relations Board v. Engraving Company, 123 Fed. (2d) 589, 593 (7 C. C. A.);

New Idea v. National Labor Relations Board, 117 Fed. (2d) 517, 524 (7 C. C. A.)

(3) The Board properly excluded certain evidence that the International Union had organized strikes with other employers and had been guilty of alleged conduct with respect thereto. The Court, in the first hearing, held that this evidence was inadmissible. A proper analysis of the facts in the case of National Labor Relations v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Company so far from supporting the opinion below, demonstrates that such opinion is in conflict with the holding in said case.

(4) The Board properly excluded evidence proffered by the Company to show that prior to 1935 the Company had not discriminated against employees whose discharges were the subject of hearings before the old N. R. A. board. The Examiner and the Board did, in fact, receive all proffered evidence on that question at the first hearing but rejected additional evidence on that subject, none of which was claimed to have been unavailable at the time of the first hearing.

F

The Lower Court has treated its jurisdiction to review findings and orders of an administrative board as co-extensive with, similar with and analogous to, its judicial authority to review legal proceedings as upon appeal from court to court.

National Labor Relations Board v. Bradford Dyeing Association, 310 U. S. 318, 60 S. Ct. 918;

Federal Communications Comm. v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 308 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437;

Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 S. Ct. 146.

IV

Argument

ONE

The decision below is in fundamental conflict with paragraphs (e) and (f) of Section 160 of the National Labor Relations Act, and is also in conflict with the decisions by the Courts of Appeal and of the Supreme Court cited under division A of the specifications. In review proceedings the Court is confined to questions of law and has nothing to do here, that the findings and order were supported by substantial evidence. Once it is conceded, as here, that the findings and order were supported by substantial evidence, all question of fact goes out of the case. It is fundamental that the Court has no jurisdiction with respect to the credibility of witnesses or the weight of evidence—that is solely a matter for the Board. Substantial evidence being present the Court cannot concern itself with the mental operations of the Board in arriving at its factual conclusion. (Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773.) The Board is not required to believe even uncontradicted testimony, it may, if it deems proper in light of the entire record, disregard any testimony as totally without value. Even if the Board is required to receive material evidence, what it does with such evidence so received is not subject to judicial review. Evidence is not proof until accepted by the trier of fact. (Gannon v. The LaClede Gas Co., 145 Mo. 502, 46 S. W. 968.)

Here the Examiner received the evidence. The Board declares that is considered it, but in light of the entire record and experience of the Board it considered such conclusionary evidence as immaterial and of no value.

The Court of Appeals sets its own opinion of the value of such evidence against the opinion of the Board. The Board, in its analysis of all of the record, and its experience in fact, held that such evidence was without weight. The Court holds that the Board should have given some weight thereto. There is no escape from the conclusion that the Court did undertake to weigh the evidence and fix the evidenciary value thereof.

The decision below extends the field of judicial review of proceedings of administrative boards clearly beyond that fixed by statute and court decisions. It is without precedent direct or by analogy. It should not stand as the law.

Two

The Court erred and its decision is in conflict with decisions of the Courts of Appeal and of the Supreme Court in holding that the Employer had been denied due process of law by reason of the Examiner having excluded four items of evidence, which evidence is described and identified in detail in subdivision B of division IV of the Summary Statement. None of such evidence was vital, controlling or immediately related to the primary issues in the case; it was collateral, secondary and had to do with "imponderables". The receipt or rejection of such evidence at most was mere procedural error. Its rejection even if erroneous, could not constitute denial of fair trial nor due process.

The words Fair Trial do not occur in the constitution. The expression fair trial may, and in an appeal from court to court, does mean a trial free from material error. As used in a court's inherent power to prevent a denial of due process of law, fair trial does not mean a trial without error. As applied to the rejection of evidence it means that such rejected evidence must be so direct, controlling and vital that without it the fundamentals of due process of law are denied.

As applied to judicial proceedings fair trial, based upon due process, means a trial under law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds on inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. (Webster's Argument in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheaton 517 l. c. 581) and a multitude of other decisions declaring and applying the principle (12 Corp. Jur. 1191).

Any trial which meets these requirements is a fair trial within the meaning of due process of law no matter what procedural errors may have been committed therein.

The law could not be otherwise. A contention that a given trial is not a fair trial because it denies due process of law necessarily raises a constitutional question. If procedural error in the rejection of competent evidence is a denial of due process then every case wherein there was such rejection of evidence would ultimately be for final decision by the Supreme Court. If a Court of Appeals in a review proceeding under the National Labor Relations Act is to reverse the findings and order of the Board by reason of procedural errors in the receipt of evidence merely by stating that such rejection is a denial of due process of law, then all distinction, at least as far as the receipt of evidence is concerned, between the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals under the National Labor Relations Act on the one hand, and jurisdiction of the Court in legal proceedings in an appeal from court to court on the other, is destroyed. Such ruling is necessarily in conflict with National Labor Relations Board v. Bradford Dyeing Association, 310 U. S. 318, 60 S. Ct. 918, and particularly in conflict with Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 308 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437, and Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 S. Ct. 146.

Again, and in this respect, the Court of Appeals has exercised a jurisdiction clearly beyond the field fixed for it in such a proceeding as this by the Congressional Act and the decisions of this court and for that reason the decision should not be permitted to stand.

THREE and FOUR

The Court erred in holding that the Employer was deprived of due process of law because the Board refused to designate a Trial Examiner for the second hearing other than the one who conducted the first hearing. The Lower Court has declared and held that neither the Examiner nor the Board was prejudiced or deliberately unfair. The opinion states:

> "We think, however, that a ruling by this court that the proceedings of the Board lack due process because of the alleged bias and prejudice against the Company and the Plant Union is not justified."

The opinion also states:

> "We think that it cannot be said that it appears from the record of the proceedings before the Examiner and before the Board that there was a denial of due process because of bias and prejudice or collusion."

The sole ground for holding lack of due process because the Board refused to appoint another examiner in the further proceedings is that in the first proceeding the Examiner then ruled and declared that the Employee's Testimony was immaterial and without value and accordingly he then excluded such evidence.

It is submitted that Congress has placed the authority to appoint such Examiners in the Board and has made the Board judge of their qualifications. (Title 29, Section 154, 155.) The decision is in violation of the statute because the court has substituted its judgment as to the propriety of reappointing the examiner for that of the Board (Hill v. Florida, 65 S. Ct. 1273, June 15, 1945). Particularly is this so when it is conceded there was no actual bias or prejudice. It might be that an examiner could be so biased and prejudiced that his conduct of the hearing would constitute denial of due process. But such basis would have to be actual and well proven prejudice. It could not be based upon mere former rulings by the Examiner, especially where he scrupulously obeyed the order of the Court of Appeals in the first case to receive such evidence.

Even in an appeal from court to court the Appellate Court could not lawfully declare that an examiner or a master or a judge was disqualified to hear a given cause for the reason that in some former proceeding or in other proceedings he had made erroneous rulings. If the Examiner were a master or judge and this were an appeal from court to court, the Lower Court's opinion that the master or the judge was disqualified for the reasons given in this opinion could not be sustained.

Walker v. United States, 116 Fed. (2d) 458 (9 C. C. A.);
Ryan v. United States, 99 Fed. (2d) 864;
Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Co., 124 Fed. (2d) 440;
O'Malley v. United States, 128 Fed. (2d) 676 (8 C. C. A.);
Berger v. United States, 255 U. S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230.

FIVE

The Lower Court erred in holding that the Trial Examiner improperly excluded four items of evidence specifically described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3) and (4) of division B of the Summary Statement.

SIX

A careful reading of the opinions and consideration of the entire tenor thereof demonstrate, we submit, that the Court of Appeals has treated its jurisdiction to review findings and orders of an administrative board as co-extensive with, similar and analogous to, its judicial authority to review legal proceedings as upon appeal from court to court. These opinions could just as well have been written upon an appeal in a law case wherein a jury had passed upon the facts. There is not a single authority that the Court of Appeals could properly exercise in such a law appeal that it does not either expressly or by necessary assumption employ in this case. With this decision in hand lawyers may logically urge in future review proceedings that the Court of Appeals knows no restriction upon its general appellate jurisdiction and authority by reason of the proceedings being governed by the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act. As to procedural errors in the reception or rejection of evidence the Court, by saying that the receipt or rejection of evidence is a denial of due process, extends its authority under the National Labor Relations Act to the full scope of general jurisdiction on appeal.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in such a proceeding as this has two sources of jurisdiction. The first is the inherent power of a court, independent of statute, to prevent the denial of due process. That jurisdiction is extremely limited and goes into the very vitals of constitutional fair trial. (Webster's Argument in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheaton 518.) The only other jurisdiction it has is that granted and limited by the National Labor Relations Act. There was here no denial of due process. The statutory limitations upon the statutory power to review have been disregarded.

This whole question of the jurisdiction of courts to review proceedings by administrative boards has been the subject of discussion by lawyers, bar associations, Congress and the Courts. One school seeks to extend such jurisdiction, and the other to restrict it. Congress has spoken and any further effective discussions must be confined to Congressional halls. That problem cannot be settled by a judicial decision such as the one at hand. For this reason the Supreme Court, upon this very vital question, should take jurisdiction. If nothing more the decision as it stands has confused and confounded the distinction between the two kinds of court review and for that reason the subject should be made clear by the Supreme Court.

Respectfully submitted,

CLIF LANGSDALE,
CLYDE TAYLOR,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

Address of Attorneys: 922 Scarritt Building, Kansas City, Missouri.

FILE COPY

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1945

No. 787

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS UNION,

Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

PETITIONER'S REPLY BRIEF

CLIF LANGSDALE,
CLYDE TAYLOR,
Counsel for Petitioner.

SUMMARY OF BRIEF AND INDEX

Statement: Page

Factually the record supports the Board's finding. Petitioner's statement to that effect is not as charged in respondents' briefs, a misstatement of the record ... 2

Point One:

In a case where admittedly the Board's finding is supported by evidence, the court has undertaken to weigh and fix the probative value of given evidence, contrary to the express provisions of the act ... 3

Point One—A:

The Trial Examiner did receive the evidence in question. The court below declared that such testimony had been received in accordance with the court's mandate, and there was no error in the receipt, rejection or other ruling in relation thereto ... 4

Point One—B:

The Trial Examiner and the Board did consider such testimony ... 5

Point One—C:

The Board weighed the employees' testimony ... 5

Point One—D:

The Board's declaration that it had received, considered and weighed the employees' testimony must be taken as final. ... 7

Point One—E:

Calling the action of the Board arbitrary in weighing evidence and discarding some thereof merely begs the question ... 8

An inordinate to-do is made by the respondents over the word "immaterial" in the Board's finding ... 9

Point Two—A: Page

The evidence in question was properly rejected. The rejection thereof would not have been reversible error, even in an ordinary jury trial. Much less could such rejection be a denial of constitutional due process of law 13

Point Two—B:

Evidence otherwise admissible may and should be excluded, because it tends to introduce collateral issues diverting the attention of the triers of fact from the precise issue and protracting the trial beyond reasonable limits. The rejected evidence was of this character 17

Point Two—C:

The fundamental question is not whether the rejected evidence was permissible, nor whether had the case been one at common law the rejection thereof would be treated as reversible error. The question here is whether the refusal to accept such rejected testimony was a denial of due process 18

Point Two—C:

The Court of Appeals acted beyond its jurisdiction to review findings and orders of an administrative board as co-extensive with, similar and analogous to its judicial authority to review legal proceedings as upon appeal from court to court. This is the fundamental error committed by the court

Points III and IV:

The Court of Appeals has treated its jurisdiction and without authority in setting aside the order of the Board because the Board appointed for the second hearing the same Examiner as had conducted the first 22

Champion v. Ames, 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492, 23 S. Ct. 34. 21

Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th Ed. p. 334-371 21, 22

	Page
Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville, 308 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437	18
Freund—"Cases on Administrative Law", page 3
Frankfurter, Justice—75 Univ. of Penn. Law Review, 615	21
Golden Reward Mining Co. v. Buxton, 97 Fed. 413, 1, c. 416	18
Greenleaf on Evidence, Sec. 14a, 16th Ed.	17
Heisler v. Thomas, 260 U. S. 243, 43 S. Ct. 83	22
Harriman—25 Yale Law Journal 658	20
Jackson v. Bowden, 67 Fla. 181, 64 So. 769, L. R. A. 1916D 931	21
Lock v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 281 Mo. 532, 219 S. W. 919, l. c. 922	18
Morgan v. U. S. 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773	7, 8
N. L. R. B. v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9, 63 S. Ct. 394	11
Ogden v. Sanders, 12 Wheat. 213 6 L. Ed. 606	21, 22
Public Administrative Law, 42 Am. Jur. 281	20
Thompson v. Bowie, 4 Wall., 463, 471, 18 L. Ed. 423	18
Union Pacific R. R. Co. v. U. S. 99 U. S. 700	21
Wellington Petitioners, 16 Pick. 86	22
Wentworth v. Smith, 44 N. H. 419, 82 Am. Dec. 228	18
42 Am. Jur. 665	20
42 Am. Jur. 669, Annot. 124 A. L. R. 998	20
42 Am. Jur. 601	21
Ralph Fuchs, 47 Yale Law Journal 538	20

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1945

No. 787

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS UNION,

Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

REPLY BRIEF OF INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS UNION PURSUANT TO PARAGRAPH 4(a), RULE 38.

NOTE: The petitioner International Ladies' Garment Workers Union is called the International Union; Donnelly Garment Company is called the Company; Donnelly Garment Workers' Union is called the Company Union. In this case 787, the International Union is sole petitioner; the Company and the Company Union, being the respondents, have filed separate briefs in opposition to the issuance of the Writ. This brief is intended as a joint reply to both thereof.

Statement

Respondents challenge the petitioner's statement that factually the record supports the Board's finding.

Factually the Record Supports the Board's Finding. Petitioner's Statement to That Effect (Petitioner's Brief 10) Is Not, as Charged, a Misstatement. (Company's Brief 4-5, Company Union's Brief 5.)

Petitioner's statement ("Factually the record supports the Board's findings. This is conceded by the Opinion") is a true statement of the record. The majority opinion states that there are two pictures, one showing unfair labor practice and the other the contrary (XIII-37). Manifestly these pictures came neither from fancy nor shadow, but from the evidence, and necessarily evidence showing the first picture supports the finding. No other conclusion from the Court's language is possible.

Counsel prevert the Court's language ("The question of which is the true picture insofar as that presents a question of fact, is not a matter with which this Court can concern itself") into meaning that the Court, in its opinion, not only did not, but could not concern itself with whether there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of unfair labor practice. Say counsel, "The Court below, in its majority opinion, expressly refused to pass upon the question whether the Board's findings were supported by the evidence" (XIII-37). That is to say, that the Court expressly refused to decide the only question it was authorized to decide under the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, paragraphs (e) and (f) Section 160. Reductio ad absurdum.

What the Court could not do, and was saying it could not do, was that, having decided that there was sufficient evidence to support the picture of unfair labor practice, the Court could not concern itself with countervailing evidence, for the manifest reason that such course would be weighing conflicting evidence.

We therefore submit that all questions in this case must be viewed against the background that factually the record and for that matter the opinion of the Court below, supports the finding.

Point One.

Petitioner's point one is that: In a case where admittedly the Board's finding is supported by evidence, the Court has undertaken to weigh and fix the probative value of given evidence (the Employees' testimony) and to set aside the Board's finding, not because of refusal to admit such evidence, but because the Board did not give the consideration and weight to such evidence that the Court, in its judgment, believed it entitled to have.

The Respondent's answer is twofold:

(a) That this is not a case where, admittedly or otherwise, the finding of the Board is supported by substantial evidence. That the Court did not so find or decide, but expressly refused so to do—"The Court below in its majority opinion expressly refused to pass upon the question whether the Board's findings were supported by the evidence; * * *" (Company brief 2-3).

(b) The Board arbitrarily disregarded the Employees' testimony; refused to consider it; or weigh it or to put it "on the scales" for any purpose (Company brief 4-5, Company Union brief 2-4), hence the Court did not weigh the evidence but merely afforded the parties due process of law.

I

Both the Examiner and the Board Received, Considered and Weighed the Employees' Testimony

A

The Examiner and the Board obeyed the Court's direction and did receive the employees' testimony.

The Trial Examiner in his report stated:

> "The undersigned accorded the respondent and the D. G. W. U. an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected at the prior hearing * * *." (Volume X, 3848)

The Board's final report recites:

> "In remanding the case to the Board for further hearing the Circuit Court directed that the respondent and the D. G. W. U. be permitted to adduce the previously proffered testimony of respondent's employees to show, in substance, that they form the union and the D. G. W. U., of their own free will and that they were not influenced, interfered with, or coerced by the respondent in choosing that organization as their bargaining representative. In compliance with the Court's mandate and pursuant to the respective offers of proof, submitted by the respondent and the D. G. W. U. at the original hearing, the Board permitted the introduction of such testimony." (Vol. X, 618-619. See also Vol. XIII, 25.)

The Court below declared and held that such testimony (the testimony of the employees) had been received in accordance with the Court's previous mandate and that there was no error in receiving, rejecting or otherwise ruling in relation thereto (Vol. XIII, 7, 8, 40, 41). That such testimony was received is beyond cavil.

B.

The Trial Examiner and the Board considered such testimony.

The Trial Examiner considered such evidence. The Trial Examiner reported:

> "The undersigned accorded the respondent and the D. G. W. U. an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected at the prior hearing. * * *. Upon the record thus made (manifestly including the Employees' testimony which the Examiner in the second preceding sentence stated that he had received), and from his observation of the witnesses, the undersigned makes, in addition to the foregoing the following findings of fact." (Vol. X, 3848).

The Board's finding recites:

> "In compliance with the Court's mandate and pursuant to the respective offers of proof submitted by the respondent and the D. G. W. U. at the original hearing the Board permitted the introduction of such testimony (Employees' testimony), we have carefully considered all such evidence adduced by the respondent and the D. G. W. U." (Vol. A. 618-619).

C

The Board weighed the Employees' testimony.

Counsel and the Court assert and reassert, proclaim and proclaim again that the Board did not weigh the Employees' testimony, but arbitrarily disregarded it, did not put it "on the scales", treated it as if it were not in the case. This is the basis for the assertion that thus, therein and thereby the Board denied the parties due process of law. We were astounded at the pristine assertion that the Board had not weighed such evidence and at each reassertion we have re-examined the record and can find no substance in Respondent's assertion or justification therefor. Our conception of weighing is to compare by the balance, to ascertain the weight of, or lack of weight of, a substance. To weigh is a transitive verb and it means the ascertainment of lack of weight as much as it means ascertaining its presence. The fact that upon trial by balance a thing is discovered to be without weight does not mean that such process is not a weighing. A thing can be weighed and found wanting.

> "Tekel; Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." 5 Daniel 27.

Manifestly the Board did weigh the Employees' testimony. While the Board does not expressly use the word weigh, yet it describes what it did and what it did, past all cavil, was weighing.

> "We have carefully considered all such evidence (Employees' testimony) adduced by the respondent and the D. G. W. U. We find, however that the testimony in question (Employees' testimony) does not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the respondent committed acts of interference and assistance in the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U., which subjected that organization to the respondent's domination and which thus removed from the Employees' selection of the D. G. W. U. in complete freedom of choice which the Act contemplates." (Vol. 13, 25-26).

That is to say, the Board did consider the Employees' testimony and did balance it against other evidence and did find that the Employees' evidence did not, in the opinion of the Board, overcome more positive evidence to the contrary. If that be not weighing, then there has been a strange misconception of the meaning of the word from the days of Daniel, through the King James' version, to the present time.

We submit that upon final analysis it becomes exceedingly clear that the complaint by respondent and the decision by the Court are not, and cannot be, based on failure by the Board to weigh evidence, but upon failure by the Board to give to conflicting evidence the weight which respondent and the Court believe it should have. Such contention assumes the Court can itself weigh conflicting evidence. No decision, expressly or by implication, extending such authority to the Court, can or should stand. It is contrary to the express wording of the Act and to many decisions of this Court and the Courts of Appeal.

D

The Board's Declaration That It Did Receive, Consider and Weigh the Employees' Testimony Must Be Taken as Final

Where does the respondent's assertion that the Board did not consider or weigh, but did arbitrarily disregard this evidence, lead? The Board expressly and officially declares that it did consider and by unmistakable implication it did weigh such evidence. These things deal with mental and subjective processes and the Board alone knows what those processes were. (Morgan v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773.). There is no room for mistake. Either the Board did, as by it declared, consider and weigh and did not arbitrarily disregard this evidence, or the Board officially states that which it knows not to be true. One who undertakes to prove such a charge against the Board carries a heavy load.

Judge Sanborn's opinion states:

> "It is contended that it appears from the record that the Trial Examiner and the Board had prejudged the case and were determined to convict the company in all events, disregarding its testimony, whenever necessary, to make a finding favorable to the Board. In order to sustain a ruling to that effect it seems to us that it would be necessary to be able to demonstrate from the record to a moral certainty the existence of such a mental state. The presumption is the other way.'" (Vol. XIII, 40.)

Here the record demonstrates to a moral certainty exactly the opposite of respondent's contention.

E

Calling the Action of the Board, in Weighing Evidence and Discarding Some Thereof as Without Value, Arbitrary, Merely Begs the Question

Counsel criticize our statement: "Even if the Board is compelled to receive material evidence, what it does with such evidence so received, is not subject to judicial review"; counsel saying, petitioner's position means that the Board may "arbitrarily disregard material evidence." (Company brief 4; Company Union brief 2).

Our expression may not be entirely fortunate. The use of the word "arbitrary" is a linguistic trick since no one wants to concede that his position is arbitrary. However, we think our position is fairly clear. Our submission is that assuming there is evidence to support the finding, the Board is the sole judge of the weight or probative value or lack thereof of any given evidence. Always assuming there is evidence to support the finding, sole authority to weigh the evidence is authority to determine after consideration that given evidence in a given case is without weight, and should be disregarded. The Court, under the Act, is without jurisdiction to inquire into the mental processes of the Board, which caused the Board to determine that given evidence was without weight, was not believed, would be disregarded. (Morgan vs. United States, 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773.) The Court may not set aside a finding because the Court believes that the Board's reason for holding given evidence without weight was not justified. For the Court so to do would be for the Court to do a forbidden thing, which is weigh conflicting evidence. (National Labor Relations Act, paragraphs (e) and (f), Section 160.)

Calling the action of the Board "arbitrary" in refusing to give weight to given material evidence; asserting that the Board "may not arbitrarily disregard material evidence", is only an indirect way of asserting that which is not true, which truth is that the Board is the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight, if any, to be attached to their testimony. No matter how it is expressed or what epithet is used, respondent's position means that the Court may substitute its judgment for the Board's in saying whether given evidence is to be given much weight, little weight or no weight.

Who is to determine whether the Board's action in determining the weight of evidence is or is not arbitrary? If the Court is so to determine, then by what standard is the Court to decide the Board's action arbitrary or not arbitrary? Manifestly the standard would have to be the Court's judgment as to whether the given evidence was or was not entitled to some weight. But this completes the circle, brings it back to the point of beginning, and is directly in contradiction to admitted law that the Board is the sole judge of the weight, if any, of evidence, and into that field the Court may not enter all the way or any part of the way. He who decides whether the Board's action in weighing evidence is arbitrary or not arbitrary is himself weighing evidence, is exercising an authority the Board alone has and the Court has not under the Act.

The Use of the Word "Immaterial" in the Board's Finding

An inordinate to-do is made by respondents over the use of the word "immaterial" in the Board's finding, as if its use destroyed all else the Board stated and declared and found. Counsel hang desperately to the word "immaterial" and contend that its use poisons the whole finding and renders the whole proceeding void, because of lack of due process. This contention entirely overlooks the indisputable fact that before, and entirely independent of the sentence in which the word "immaterial" occurs, the Board had received, considered and weighed all of the evidence and found that the employees' testimony did not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the company was guilty of unfair labor practice.

> "We have carefully considered all such evidence (Employees' testimony) adduced by the respondent and the D. G. W. U. We find, however, that the testimony in question does not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the respondent committed acts of interference and assistance in the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. which subjected that organization to the respondents' (the company) domination, and which removed from the employees selection of the D. G. W. U., the complete freedom of choice which the Act contemplates". Vol. X, 2526.

It is after such finding, and purely supplemental thereto, in an independent sentence, that the word "immaterial" is found. The Board then states "Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive", that is, having already found the testimony unpersuasive, when viewed against the whole record, the Board adds the further and additional consideration that its experience in administration of the Act caused it to conclude the conclusionary evidence of this nature was immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case. Manifestly the Board did not mean, by the use of this word, to indicate that such testimony should not be received, considered and weighed in light of the entire record, because that is precisely what the Board had already done. It may well be that this is a loose use of the word immaterial, but it cannot be tortured into meaning that the Board did not and would not receive, consider and weigh such evidence but arbitrarily disregard it. If, instead of using the word immaterial, the Board had said that its experience demonstrated that such evidence, when viewed in light of an entire record, was not persuasive, or was of little value, or even of no value, such language would mean nothing more than that used by the Board, and the entire base of respondent's argument would be gone.

The Case of NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Electric Company, 318 U. S. 9, 63 S. Ct. 394

This case is used by respondents primarily in support of their contention that there was denial of due process because it is alleged the Board excluded four items of evidence (accurately described in the petition of NLRB for certiorari in case 786, pages 3 and 4). The Indiana case is quite accurately analyzed by the NLRB counsel in its petition, pages 44, 45, 46 and 47. The following may be added.

The Indiana case was decided upon a petition to the court to remand the case to the Board to hear additional evidence, under the express provision of paragraph (e), Section 160, Title 29 U. S. C. A.—providing that either party may apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence. That proceeding, so far as the Supreme Court was concerned, was not to enforce or set aside an order of the Board pursuant to statutory jurisdiction, nor was it to set it aside because it denied to the parties due process of law. The granting or refusing of a petition to take additional evidence resides largely in the discretion of the court (318 U. S. l. c. 27, 63 S. Ct. l. c. 404). This proceeding was not to hear additional evidence, nor was any order made as to adducing further evidence. The proceeding was leveled at the validity of the Board's order. The Court held the order void (Vol. XIII,71). A proceeding for an order to adduce additional evidence is a far different thing from a proceeding to set aside an order of the Board—questions of jurisdiction and authority are different. The general statements in the Indiana opinion are to be construed and confined, by the character of the facts, and nature of the proceeding in that case, when attempt is made to apply such statements to the case at bar.

Not only were the proceedings distinct and different, but the facts in the two cases are entirely dissimilar, not having even general likeness. In the Indiana case the excluded evidence, which the court directed should be received, disclosed dynamiting and other violence, threats, intimidations resulting in witnesses refusing to testify or to commit perjury, and a general condition of lawlessness, all calculated and intended to influence the witnesses, the Examiner and the Board. Nothing comparable to that exists in this record. See NLRB petition in No. 786, page 24 and following. The Supreme Court in the Indiana case said:

> "'Dynamiting or display of force by either party has no place in the procedures which lead to reasoned judgments. The influence of lawless force directed toward parties or witnesses to proceedings during their pendency is so sinister and undermining of the process of adjudication itself that no court should regard it with indifference or shelter it from exposure and inquiry.'' 318 U. S. l. c. 29.

The evidence in question here was not offered upon any such theory. The lower court, in the first decision, held that this identical testimony was not admissible. The court there said:

> "We are of the opinion that the Trial Examiner did not err in confining the issues to those which were tendered by the complaint filed by the Board. We are satisfied that the Board was not required to try the International for alleged conspiracy, nor to try the charge that the Board had conspired or colluded with the International.'' 123 Fed. (2d) l. c. 225.

We contend that the rejected evidence would not have been admissible, even in a jury trial, and certainly such rejection would not require a reversal even under the broad jurisdiction of appeal from court to court. See NLRB petition, case No. 786, p. 24 and following. This question is discussed in the next division of this brief.

The point now is that what was said and done in the Indiana case is not applicable, much less controlling, here.

Point Two

A.

Rejection of the Evidence in Question Would Not Have Been Reversible Error Even in an Ordinary Jury Trial. Much Less Could Such Rejection Be a Denial of Constitutional Due Process of Law.

In the first place, since all rulings rejecting evidence in the first hearing were assigned as error in the first case, the Examiner was warranted, in the second hearing, in assuming: (a) that his rulings with respect to the rejection of evidence, except where condemned, or at least mentioned in the court's opinion, were not erroneous and should be by him followed; (b) that certainly his rejection, in the first hearing, of evidence of alleged illegal conduct of the International (which rejection was expressly approved by the court (125 Fed. (2d) l. c. 225 (15)) was to be adhered to; (c) that he was not to hear any new or additional evidence not within the scope of the remand.

These considerations alone dispose of nearly all complaint concerning rejection of evidence. Moreover the rejection of the evidence in question did not constitute reversible error.

Contracts between the International and other employers said to contain terms less favorable to the employees than the contract between the company and the company union.

Such testimony was non-receivable because it would lead to endless collateral issues, a practice condemned by all trial courts. Who is to say one long complicated contract is more favorable to one party than another contract of like character between other parties? If one side introduces certain terms claimed to be more favorable, the other would introduce other terms said to counterbalance. The court would be deserting and laying aside the main issue to try endless collateral matters.

Aside from this, the only conceivable value of such evidence would be that it could be argued therefrom that the company employees formed the company union because it could obtain a more favorable contract than from the International. But, even here, the existence of such contracts could not bear upon the motive of the employee unless the employee knew thereof, and then it would not be what was in the contract, but what the employee believed was in it. That is precisely the ruling of the Trial Examiner. He excluded the terms of the collateral contracts, but admitted evidence from the employees as to what they understood were in such contracts and whether they joined the company union because of what they believed. Such ruling of the Examiner's runs through pages of the record. We refer to Volume VII, 2514 and following, and Volume VIII, 2521 and following. For instance, note the following:

"Trial Examiner Batten: I think it is important also to know what information they (the employees) had. I say 'what information they had' not what information was available in somebody's office, Mr. Tyler. What information did these people have upon which they acted"? Vol. VII, 2514.

* * * we should take the testimony of these employees as to what they thought, what motivated them in doing the things they did. I agree with you on that. * * * In other words, it does seem to me that that is the primary purpose for which the court sent it back, to take the testimony of these people, what they thought, why they did thees things", Vol. VII, 2518.

The Trial Examiner did receive testimony of the employees as to what they understood and had heard with respect to such contracts and other activities of the International and what effect such information had upon their joining the company union. Volume VII, 2593, 2594, 2929, 2931; Volume IX, 3080.

Testimony with respect to alleged illegal conduct, fraud and violence on the part of the International.

This evidence was excluded at the first hearing and its exclusion was expressly approved by the Court of Appeals in the first case (125 Fed. (2d) l. c. 225 (15)). Such testimony was non-receivable because it necessarily led to the trial of collateral issues. Moreover in the second hearing the Examiner did admit testimony on this subject for the only purpose for which it could possibly be relevant, and that was a bearing upon the motive of the employees in joining the company union. Here again actual violence, fraud and other misconduct was not admissible per se, but what the employees had experienced or heard and believed was admitted, regardless of whether such information was true or false. (VII, 2566-2568, 2624-2626-2711-2713, 2768-2771, 2788 2848-2851, 2915-2917, 3003-3006, 3046-3049, 3078-3081, 3120-3121, 3169-3171, 4101-4102, 5125-4169, 4173-4175.)

Evidence that the International, under other contracts with other employers, received as eligible members employees allegedly having duties similar to those of supervisory employees at the Donnelly plant.

There was testimony that certain employees of the company were supervisory employees, so that their statements and conduct would be binding upon the company. The company claimed these were not supervisory employees, and for the purpose of showing that they were not, the company offered to prove that similar employees in other plants under contracts with the International, were admitted to membership, when they could not have been admitted if they were supervisory employees. Manifestly this was remote and collateral, leading, if it was received, to interminable comparison and inquiry concerning various kinds of employees in other plants; whether the conditions were similar in the various plants, or whether and wherein they differed, and so forth and so on. The rulings of the Examiner are found in Volume VII, 2508-2510; Volume VIII, 2559-2564-2788-2789; Volume IX, 3527; Volume X, 3787-3794.

In addition to this evidence leading to the trial of collateral issues, such evidence was inadmissible because what the International did with respect to other employers and employees could not possibly have material weight with the Board in determining the primary issue of the presence or absence of unfair labor practice by this Company. Respondents treat this case as if it were a suit at law between the International and the Company, wherein the acts and conduct and declaration of the International would be permissible because admissions against interest.

B

Evidence Otherwise Admissible May and Often Should Be Excluded Because It Tends to Introduce Collateral Issues Diverting the Attention of the Triers of Fact from the Precise Issues Involved in the Case and Protract the Trial Beyond Reasonable Limits. The Admission or Exclusion of Such Evidence Rests Very Largely in the Discretion of the Trial Judge, Here the Examiner and the Board.

The foregoing proposition is elementary. The following is a characteristic statement of the law:

> "This general rule (admission of all relevant evidence), however, is subject to the important qualification that testimony which does have some tendency to establish a material fact may be rejected by a trial judge, and should be rejected, when its admission will have a tendency to divert the attention of the jury from the precise issues involved in the case, and protract the trial beyond reasonable limits. This limitation of the general rule requiring all relevant testimony to be admitted to which we have last alluded, is not only reasonable in itself, but it is well supported by the authorities. * * *"
>
> "It is always a question within the discretion of the trial judge as to how far parties may be permitted to go into collateral issues; such discretion being exercised by a fair consideration whether the evidence is relevant to the issue, its probable effect upon the jury, the likelihood of confusing the issues, and the probable time that will be consumed if such collateral issues are followed to their legitimate ends." New England Trust Co. v. Farr, 57 F. (2d) 103, l. c. 110.

The same principle is announced in 1, Greenleaf on Evidence, Section 14 A, 16th Edition, wherein it is called the Doctrine of Collateral Inconvenience; Schradsky v. Stim- son, 76 F. 730, l. c. 734; Lock v. C. B. & Q. Railroad Co., 281 Mo. 582, 219 S. W. 919, l. c. 922; Golden Reward Mining Co. v. Buxton, 97 F. 413, l. c. 416; Wentworth v. Smith, 44 N. H. 419, 82 Am. Dec. 228; Thompson v. Bowie, 4 Wall. 463, 471, 18 L. Ed. 423.

We submit the action of the Examiner, approved by the Board, with respect to the evidence in question, was not such an abuse of discretion as to constitute reversible error even in a common law trial, much less a denial of due process of law.

C

The Fundamental Question Is Not Whether the Rejected Evidence Was Permissible, Nor Whether Had the Case Been One at Common Law, the Rejection Thereof Would Be Treated as Reversible Error. The Question Here Is Whether the Refusal to Accept Such Rejected Testimony Was a Denial of Due Process of Law.

Counsel for respondents persist, as did the court, in refusing to recognize the distinction between the principles governing the jurisdiction of the court upon appeal from court to court, on the one hand, and those principles that govern statutory jurisdiction to review Administrative Board orders. (Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville, 308 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437.) Even at the expense of brevity we should reply.

Beyond question the court exceeded its statutory jurisdiction granted by the Act. The Court has no statutory jurisdiction to review procedural errors, receipt or rejection of evidence, qualification of Examiner or any other question except whether the finding is supported by substantial evidence. The question then necessarily must be, did the Court exceed its inherent jurisdiction to prevent denial of due process of law? Certain principles of administrative law are to be had in mind.

Distinction between statutory and constitutional jurisdiction in reviewing orders of administrative boards.

The findings and orders of an administrative board are essentially legislative and there is no judicial review of such orders (aside from the question of due process), except that granted by a statute. Many laws creating boards make no provision for court review and it is not necessary to their validity that they should have. In such cases the sole jurisdiction is the constitutional one.

The order of an administrative board, created by valid law, is inherently legislative and the validity of the order as to its constitutionality is to be tested and tried, precisely the same as if it were a specific legislative act. For instance, the legislature has power to regulate rates of common carriers and it may do so by as direct a statute as one providing that passenger rates shall be 3¢ a mile. For reasons well understood and learnedly discussed in the Pottsville case, direct legislative regulatory acts become increasingly impractical, if not impossible. Hence Legislative boards were born. These acts have successfully withstood persistent and skillful attack upon their constitutionality. Such laws have been sustained upon the theory that the act of the board is in itself, under a valid law, the act of the legislature. Instead of enacting that passenger rates shall be 3¢ per mile, the legislature provides that passenger rates shall be reasonable, in accordance with certain fundamental principles and standards contained in the legislative act. Then the administrative board, acting in strict compliance with the standards fixed by the legislature, makes an order to fit the facts within a given case. When such board, in proper proceedings and hearing, makes an order that, within a given territory passenger rates shall be 3¢ a mile, the situation is precisely as if the legislature itself had directed such rate. (See authorities hereinafter cited.)

Laws creating administrative boards ordinarily do provide for a limited court review, but the absence of such a provision does not affect the validity of the act, any more than the legislature in enacting a given statute is required to provide for court review of its validity (42 Am. Jur. 665). The point is, that no court has any power generally to review a board order, except that granted by statute. Where there is such grant, the review must be strictly confined to the scope of the statute (42 Am. Jur. 669; Annot. 124 A. L. R. 998).

We concede that every American court of general jurisdiction has inherent power to prevent violation of the constitution by common law and equitable process, and this is applicable to orders of administrative boards precisely as it is to legislative acts. But the court, pursuant to such inherent power testing the validity of an order of an administrative board, proceeds precisely as, and with exactly the same limitations, that it would if it were reviewing the constitutionality of a specific legislative act. The principles governing the action of a court in appeal from court to court have no application whatsoever to the inherent jurisdiction of a court to declare either a board order or a legislative act unconstitutional.

The foregoing principles may be taken as established by Court decisions and the law writers. The leading case, of course, is the Pottsville case. An extended and learned review and discussion of these principles is found under the title "Public Administrative Law," 42 Am. Jour. 281 and following; a like article by Ralph F. Fuchs in 47 Yale Law Journal 538 (1937); see also the Harriman article, 25 Yale Law Journal 658; Freund, "Cases on Administrative Law," page 3; Professor Frankfurter, now Mr. Justice Frankfurter, 75 University of Pennsylvania Law Review 615. The scope of court review of administrative orders is dealt with in 42 Am. Jur., page 601 and following.

The canons guiding the courts in determination of the constitutionality of a legislative act are applicable to assaults upon orders of administrative boards upon the ground that they deny due process of law, and such canons are applicable to and controlling in this case, precisely the same as if it were an attack upon the constitutionality of a specific legislative act. Some of these canons here controlling are as follows:

While undoubtedly a court has judicial authority, in a given case, to declare a legislative act unconstitutional and hence void, yet the task is "a delicate one and only to be entered upon with reluctance and hesitation." Every presumption and intendment is to be indulged in favor of validity. The burden is upon him who attacks the law. The invalidity must be clear and certain. Unless the act is clearly unconstitutional, it will be held valid.

> "It is our duty, when required in the regular course of judicial proceedings, to declare an act of Congress void if not within the legislative power of the United States; but this declaration should never be made except in a clear case. Every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt. One branch of the government cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule." Union Pacific Railroad Co. v. United States, 99 U. S. 700 (Sinking-Fund Cases).

1 Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th edition, page 334; Champion v. Ames, 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492, 23 S. Ct. 34; Jackson v. Bowden, 67 Fla. 181, 64 So. 769, L. R. A. 1916D, 931. Any reasonable doubt as to the validity of the act is to be resolved in favor of its validity. Ogden

v. Sanders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. Ed. 606. It is not sufficient that there be judicial doubt of validity. 1 Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th edition, page 371; Wellington Petitioners, 16 Pick. 86, opinion by Shaw, Ch. J.; Heisler v. Thomas, 260 U. S. 243, 43 S. Ct. 83.

These canons, supported by cloud of authority, are applicable in this case. Before the rejection of proffered evidence can be unconstitutional and void, because of a denial of due process, the rejected evidence must be so clearly admissible, so direct and fundamental, that it transcends mere error; that without such evidence manifestly and clearly the parties cannot have a fair trial. It must be such a part of the party's case that without it there was no real trial. If the question of admission or rejection is reasonably debatable, it cannot be denial of due process. The ruling must not only be wrong, but manifestly wrong, and it must be vital to the merits of the case. The law could not be otherwise, else a court, under the guise of due process, could expand its jurisdiction to review findings and orders of administrative boards coextensive with its general authority and jurisdiction upon appeal. We submit that that is what the lower court has done in this case.

None of the foregoing principles and propositions are submitted as mere error. We recognize that error of itself is not ground for certiorari. The erroneous rulings of the court transcend mere error affecting alone the rights of the parties to this suit, but affecting (erroneous and in conflict with other decisions, we submit) the administration of one of the most important and far-reaching statutes on the books. This is a typical case for certiorari.

Points Three and Four

These Points by Petitioner are that the parties were not deprived of due process of law by the action of the Board in appointing the same examiner for the second hearing who had conducted the first.

Let it be noted that respondents have not countered the following, asserted by the petitioner (Petitioner's brief, 27, 28, 29).

(a) The Court, both in the first and the second cases, found no actual prejudice on the part of either the Examiner or the Board (123 Fed. 2d 215-219, the first case—also Vol. XIII-40, the second case).[1]

(b) In the second hearing the Examiner in good faith accepted the Court's ruling and did, without erroneous ruling, receive the employees' testimony.

(c) There is nothing in the record to show that the consideration given by the Examiner, of the Employees' evidence, was influenced to any degree by the fact that in the first hearing (before the Court had spoken on the question) he, the Examiner, had refused to receive such evidence and expressed his then opinion that such testimony was immaterial.[2] There is nothing to show that after the ruling in the first case the Examiner prejudged the testimony without weight before he received and reconsidered it. That is to say, there is nothing to show that after the Court's mandate and opinion were received the Examiner did not in good faith reconsider and reweigh such testimony. The fact that the Board, on reconsideration, found the testimony, in light of the entire record, to be without weight, does not mean that the Board prejudged that question before giving honest reconsideration.

[1] "We think that it cannot be said that it appears from the record of the proceedings before the Examiner and before the Board, that there was a denial of due process because of bias and prejudice or collusion." (123 Fed. 2d 215-219, also Vol. XIII-7, the first case.)

"We think, however, that a ruling by this Court, that the proceedings of the Board lack due process because of the alleged bias and prejudice against the company and the plant union, is not justified." (Vol. XIII-40, the second case.)

The decisions as to the disqualification of Judges are applicable.

The decisions of the Supreme Court and of the Courts of Appeal, holding that a judge is not to be disqualified because of his previous rulings in the same or other cases, are applicable here. Respondents say that the ruling as to disqualifications of judges is not applicable because any erroneous rulings by the judge may be corrected on appeal (Company brief 9).

The authority of the Board to correct errors upon the part of the Examiner is far broader than the authority of the Court correcting mistakes upon the part of the judge. The Trial Examiner has no authority to rule finally on anything. The Board may send the case back to the Examiner to take further evidence, to make other and different rulings. So far as the merits of the case are concerned, the report of the Examiner at best is but advisory and may be accepted or rejected or modified by the Board itself. If it be good law that a judge is not to be disqualified because of his previous opinions and rulings, even in the same case, then it is also good law that an examiner is not to be disqualified for such reason.

Respectfully submitted,

CLIF LANGSDALE,
CLYDE TAYLOR,
Counsel for Petitioner.

Address of Attorneys:
922 Scarritt Building,
Kansas City, Missouri.

FILE COPY

OCT 7 1946

Nos. 38 and 39.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1946.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

BRIEF OF INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER.

CLIF LANGSDALE,
CLYDE TAYLOR,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

922 Scarritt Building,
Kansas City, Missouri.

SMITH-GREVES LAW PRINTING KANSAS CITY MO

INDEX.

	PAGE
Specification of errors and points relied upon	2
Opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals	4
Jurisdiction	4
Summary statement of the matter involved	4
Parties	4
Nature of the proceeding before the Court of Appeals	5
Scope of Jurisdiction by the Supreme Court where a case is before it from the Court of Appeals by certiorari	4
Statement of evidence supporting the board's findings	8
Summary, with page citation, of argument	67
Argument	71
Point I. There is substantial evidence to support the finding	71
Point II. Procedural or judicial error is not denial of due process	75
Point III. Rejection of evidence in question would not have been reversible error in an ordinary suit at law	84
Point IV. The examiner did receive and both the examiner and the Board did consider and weigh the employees' evidence	90
Point V. The Court of Appeals in direct violation of the provisions of the Act did itself weigh evidence	94
Point VI. The court treated its jurisdiction to review findings of administrative boards as co-extensive with, similar and analogous to its judicial authority in legal proceedings as upon appeal	95
Point VII. Failure of the Board to designate a trial examiner for the second hearing, other than the one who conducted the first hearing, was proper	98

Cases Cited.

	PAGE
Berger v. U. S., 255 U. S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230	99
Consolidated v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 197, 59 S. Ct. 206	74
Commonwealth v. Philadelphia Coal Co., 145 Pac. 283, 23 Atl. 809, 12 C. J. 1195	78
Central Land Co. of West Virginia v. Laidley, 16 S. Ct. l. c. 83, 159 U. S. 103	79, 80
Champion v. Anes, 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492, 23 S. Ct. 321	84
Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97	79
Donnelly Garment Co. v. NLRB, No. 12641, 151 Fed. (2d) 854	4
Donnelly Garment Co. v. NLRB, 123 Fed. (2d) 215	5
Ex Parte Quirin, 317 U. S. 1, 63 S. Ct. 1	7
Federal Communications Comm. v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437	81, 95
Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 S. Ct. 443	81
Forsyth v. City of Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 17 S. Ct. 665	7
FPC v. Natural Gas Co., 315 U. S. 575, 62 S. Ct. 736	75
Golden Reward Mining Co. v. Buxton, 97 Fed. 413	90
Huber v. Reily, 53 Penn. 112, 16 C. J. S. 1150	77
Heisler v. Thomas, 260 U. S. 245, 43 S. Ct. 83	84
International Lodge v. NLRB, 110 Fed. (2d) 29, affirmed 311 U. S. 72, 61 S. Ct. 83	74
Jackson v. Bowden, 67 Fla. 181, 64 So. 769, LRA 1916D 931	84
Lock v. C. B. & Q. RR. Co., 281 Mo. 532, 219 S. W. 919	90
Mabee v. McDonald, (Tex.) 175 S. W. 676	78
Miami County v. Dayton, 92 Ohio State 215, 110 N. E. 276	79

PAGE

Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co. v. State of Wisconsin, 40 S. Ct. l. e. 309, 252 U. S. 100 80

Montgomery Ward v. NLRB, 107 Fed. (2d) l. e. 560 (7 CCA) 74

Morgan v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773 ..... 93, 98

Murray v. Hoboken Land Co., 18 Howard 272 ..... 76, 77, 78

NLRB v. Bradford Dyeing Association, 310 U. S. 318, 60 S. Ct. 918 ..... 73, 81

NLRB v. Link-Belt Co., 61 S. Ct. l. e. 365, 311 U. S. 584 73

NLRB v. Milan Shirt Mfg. Co., 125 Fed. (2d) 376 73

NLRB v. Pennsylvania Lines, 303 U. S. 261, 58 S. Ct. 571 74

NLRB v. Remington-Rand, 130 Fed. (2d) l. e. 930 74

NLRB v. Southern Co., 319 U. S. 50, 63 S. Ct. l. e. 910 74

New England Trust Co. v. Farr, 57 Fed. (2d) 103 90

Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. Ed. 606 84

O'Malley v. U. S., 128 Fed. (2d) 676 (8 CCA) 99

Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113, 83 Am. D. 728 77

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714 76

Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Co., 124 Fed. (2d) 440 99

Riley v. Worcester County Trust Co., 89 Fed. (2d) l. e. 66 79

Ryan v. U. S., 99 Fed. (2d) 864 99

Schradsky v. Stimson, 76 Fed. 730 90

Southern Bell Tele. Co. v. Louisiana Comm., 195 La. 729, 17 So. 548 76

Swift v. NLRB, 106 Fed. (2d) l. e. 93 (10 CCA) 74

Thompson v. Bowie, 4 Wall. 463, 18 L. Ed. 423 90

The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 17 S. Ct. 495 7

Tracy v. Ginzberg, 27 S. Ct., l. e. 463 81

PAGE

Union Pacific Railroad Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 700 83
Virginia Power Co. v. NLRB, 319 U. S. 533, 539, 545, 63 S. Ct. 1214 75
Walker v. U. S. 116 Fed. (2d) 458 (9 CCA) 99
Wellington, Petitioner, 16 Pick. 86 84
Westworth v. Smith, 44 N. H. 419, 82 Am. D. 228 90
Wilson & Co. v. NLRB, 124 Fed. (2d) 845 (7 CCA) 74

Statutes Cited.

Sec. 240 Judicial Code, 43 Stat. 938, Title 28 4
49 Stat. 926 U. S. C. A. Title 29, Sec. 160, par. (e) and (f) 72

Text Books and Law Journals Cited.

Address of Elihu Root to ABA, 41 ABA Rep. 355 98
1 Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th Edition, p. 334, p. 371 84
Freund "Cases on Administrative Law," page 3 98
1 Greenleaf on Evidence, Sec. 14A, 16th Edition 90
Professor Frankfurter, 75 U. of Pa. Law Review 615 98
Ralph F. Fuchs, 47 Yale Law Journal 540 98
12 C. J. 1188 76
16 C. J. S. 1143, 12 C. J. 1192 ..... 76, 77

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1946.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, Petitioner,

vs.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION and NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

BRIEF OF INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER.

Nos. 38 and 39.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS AND POINTS RELIED UPON.

I.

There is competent, relevant and substantial evidence to support the findings and order of the Board. This being so it is error for a court to set aside the order because the court believed the Board did not give that weight to given evidence which the court believes it should have. (Point I of the Argument, p. 71.)

II.

It is error for a court to set aside the order of the Board on the ground of denial of due process because of procedural error in the receipt or rejection of evidence. Procedural error is not a denial of due process. (Point II of the Argument, p. 75.)

III.

It is error for a court to set aside the order of the Board on account of the rejection of evidence, when such rejection would not have been reversible error in an ordinary jury trial. (Point III of the Argument, p. 84.)

IV.

It is error for a court to set aside the order of the Board on the ground that the Board did not consider and weigh given evidence, in the face of declarations in the findings by the Board that such evidence was received, considered and weighed, and where the record clearly supports the truth of such Board declaration. (Point IV of the Argument, p. 90.)

V.

It is error and in violation of the provisions of the Act for the court itself to weigh evidence. (Point V of the Argument, p. 94.)

VI.

It is error for a court to treat its jurisdiction in reviewing findings and orders of an administrative board as co-extensive with, similar and analogous to its judicial authority in legal proceedings, as upon appeal from court to court. And it is error for the court in such proceeding not to confine its jurisdiction to that granted by statute or based upon its inherent jurisdiction to afford due process. (Point VI of the Argument, p. 95.)

VII.

It is error for a court to set aside the order of an administrative board because of failure of the board to designate a Trial Examiner for a second hearing, other than the one who conducted a first hearing. (Point VII of the Argument, p. 98.)

BRIEF.

Opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals.

There are two opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals dealing with the subject matter of this litigation, which are reported in 151 Fed. (2d) 854 and 123 Fed. (2d) 215, respectively.

Jurisdiction.

This court has jurisdiction of this cause forasmuch as it, on April 22, 1946 (66 S. Ct. 958, Advance Sheets, May 15, 1946), pursuant to Section 240, Judicial Code, 43 Stat. 938, Title 28, Section 347, U. S. C. A., issued its writ of certiorari to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, bringing to this court, for unrestricted review, the record in an original proceeding in such Court of Appeals, there entitled Donnelly Garment Company v. National Labor Relations Board, No. 12641, reported in 151 Federal Reporter, 2nd Series, 854.

Summary Statement of the Matter Involved.

Parties.

Parties to the proceeding are the National Labor Relations Board, herein called the Board; Donnelly Garment Company, herein called the Company; Donnelly Garment Workers Union, herein called the plant union, and International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, herein called the International.

Nature of the Proceedings Before the Court of Appeals.

The proceeding before the Court of Appeals was, under the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act (herein called the Act), upon the petition of the Employer (A-1) to review and set aside an order of the Board entered June 9, 1943 (50 NLRB 241, Rec. Vol. A., p. 618), which Board order required the disestablishment of the plant union, the abrogation of its contract with the Company and discontinuance of certain unfair labor practices. The Board, in its answer, prayed the Court to approve and enforce said order (A-361). The plant union and the International, each by leave of court, intervened (A-368-369), 49 Stat. 926, Title 29, Sec. 160, par. (c) and (f).

Some Detail Concerning Nature of the Proceedings.

The Board, upon charges filed, issued, on April 27, 1939, its complaint against the Company charging it with unfair labor practices as therein specified within the meaning of Section 8 (1, 2 and 3) of the Act and other provisions of the Act. Extended hearings (the record contains more than 5,000 pages) were held. The Board sustained the charges of unfair labor practices, disestablished the plant union, abrogated the contract between that union and the Company, and made incidental provisions for enforcement of the Board's order (A-552). On petition by the Company to review the order of the Board, the Court of Appeals (Donnelly Garment Company v. National Labor Relations Board, 123 Fed. (2d) 215) set aside such order because of what the court termed "defects in its procedure caused by the failure of the trial examiner to receive admissible evidence." (123 Fed. (2d), l. c. 225, par. (16).) Accordingly, the proceeding was remanded to the Board for the taking of additional testimony.

Pursuant to the court's mandate, the Board vacated its findings and order of March 6, 1940, and proceeded with further hearing, receiving the evidence rejected at the first hearing, for the rejection of which the court had set aside the first order (Vol. 10-3785). The Board made practically the same findings and entered practically the same order as it had found and entered previous to the court's remand (A-618-622).

Preliminary and Herein of Petitioner's Method of Submission.

Petitioner's ultimate submission is that judgment should be entered herein by this Court, denying the petition of the employer to review and set aside the order of the Board (A-552) and granting the request of the Board to enforce said order (A-617) or, the equivalent thereof, sending the case back with specific instructions for the Court of Appeals to enter such judgment. Whether the opinion of the Court of Appeals and its judgment pursuant thereto, contains reversible error, as such term is ordinarily used in appellate practice, is incidental to the subject matter now before the Supreme Court as contrasted with the primary question of what should be the judgment of this Court, whether the order by the Board should be set aside or enforced.

Manifestly, the reasons embraced within the opinion of the Court of Appeals as to why the order should not be enforced should and will be met by petitioner, but met as fallacious arguments against enforcement of the order. This method of submission is justified, if not required, because:

The Supreme Court on certiorari under Judicial Code 240 and pursuant to its general authority to issue writs (Judicial Code 262) has authority to treat the case in this court practically de novo upon the record made below.

Distinctly and clearly, the Act of March 3, 1891, "was intended to vest in this Court a comprehensive and unlimited power" (Forsyth v. City of Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 17 S. Ct. 665, l. c. 668); the power is wide, "this power is co-extensive with all possible necessities and sufficient to secure to this Court a final control over the litigation in all courts of appeal" (same citation, l. c. 669). See, also, The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 17 S. Ct. 495:

> "We reaffirm in this case the proposition heretofore announced, to-wit, that the power of this court in certiorari extends to every case pending in the Circuit Court of Appeals and may be exercised at any time during such pendency * * *" (Forsyth, 166 U. S. 506, 17 S. Ct., l. c. 669).
>
> "The power thus given is not affected by the condition of the case as it exists in the Court of Appeals. It may be exercised before or after any decision by that court and irrespective of any ruling or determination therein." (Forsyth, l. c. 668.)

In the late case of Ex Parte Quirin, 317 U. S. 1, 63 S. Ct. 1, this Court, by certiorari, brought before it for final action, and itself made final disposition of a case pending in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

It is pursuant to such principles governing the scope of judicial authority on certiorari that petitioner treats the subject matter primarily as if it were de novo.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE SUPPORTING THE BOARD'S FINDINGS.

The Board's findings that the company has engaged in unfair labor practices in contravention of Section 8 (1), (2), and (3) of the Act, are supported by substantial evidence and sustain the Board's order.

The record in this case is such that it should be unnecessary for us to marshal the facts to sustain the conclusion that the Board's findings upon which its order was based are supported by substantial evidence.

The trial examiner's intermediate report (R. X, 3848-3889), as adopted by the Board in its decision, is so clear and well reasoned and so well fortified with record facts, and so well briefed with case law, that it seems presumptuous to argue in its favor before this Court.

In the opinion of the Court of Appeals, written by Judge Sanborn, the facts found by the examiner, as set out in pages 8-25, Volume XIII, beyond all cavil, show that the findings of the trial examiner are supported by substantial evidence. Neither in this case nor in the prior case has it been suggested in the opinion of the court that there has not been substantial evidence in the record to support the findings of the trial examiner. On the contrary, Judge Sanborn in his opinion in this case (R. XIII, p. 37) says:

> "The picture drawn by the International and the Board is that of an employer which, solely because of hostility to the International, has influenced and coerced its employees into forming a plant union and entering into a closed-shop agreement, thus depriving them of their freedom of action and choice and making them, in effect, the bondservants of their employer."

The judge then proceeded to describe the picture presented by the Company and the plant union and thereafter the judge very properly said (R. XIII, p. 37):

> "The question as to which is the true picture, insofar as that presents a question of fact, is not a matter with which this court can concern itself."

That language comes very nearly holding that the findings of the examiner in this case were supported by substantial evidence and that the Board's order would be enforced were it not for certain proceedings which the judge held to be erroneous and to amount to a denial of due process.

Early in 1934 the International opened an office in Kansas City, Missouri, and publicly announced that an effort would be made to organize the workers in the garment industry in that city. Almost immediately the Company became active in opposition to the International and particularly to the effort of the International to organize the workers of the Company, and that opposition continued down through the period of time covered by the hearing before the Board; to-wit, July 15, 1939.

Chronologically the said opposition of the Company falls into three eras, (1) from the advent of the International in Kansas City, in 1934, to July 5, 1935, the effective date of the National Labor Relations Act; (2) the period from July 5, 1935, the effective date of the Act, down to the date of the formation of the plant union, April 27, 1937; (3) the period from the date of the formation of the plant union to the last day encompassed by the evidence in the hearing before the Board.

(1) Company's opposition to the International and unions in general prior to the effective date of the National Labor Relations Act.

In the following statement the references preceding the semicolon are to the pages of the Record where the findings in the Intermediate Report, which were adopted by the Board (A 618), appear; references following the semicolon are to the pages of the Record where the supporting evidence appears.

Prior to 1934 no effort had ever been made to organize the employees of the Donnelly Garment Company. In 1934 the International established an office in Kansas City, Missouri, and announced in the papers that an attempt would be made to organize the garment workers of Kansas City (X 3859; IV 1307-1312). On March 15, 1934, the International held an open meeting at the Musicians' Hall, to which all of the employees of the Company were invited. Another similar meeting was held at Eagles' Hall on December 4, 1934. On both occasions the Company's supervisory force attended the meetings in a group, including the production manager, personnel manager, and many of the instructors whose supervisory capacity in the Company's plant is hereinafter discussed. (X 3859-3860; III 1033-1034, 1102, 1104, 1058, 1105-1106, 1113.)

During 1934 at least a dozen of the Company's employees joined the International (X 3860; III 1033, 1036, 1037, 1043, 1047, 1052, 1098; IV 1120-1120-b, 1120 mm-1120 rr, 1120 vv, 1140-1141, 1153, 1156-1157). Employees who were observed attending meetings and others were called to the office where Production Manager Reeves questioned them about their interest in the union, reprimanded those who had joined, and warned others that joining would do them no good (X 3860; I 306-308; III 1035-1036, 1044-1046, 1052-1055, 1067-1068, 1073-1074, 1076, 1079-1087, 1141, 1153-1154, 329). Mrs. Gray, manager of the Company's retail outlet store (X 3860, IX 3336, X 3572, 3644-3645), told an employee that it was a "shame" that she had joined the ILGWU (X 3860; III 1088-1089). Production Engineer Dewey Atchison asked employees why they did not come to the Company instead of "going down to a bunch of foreigners" (X 3860; III 1068; IV 1331), advised against "getting messed up" with the union (X 3860; III 1100-1101), and warned that they would be fired if they did (X 3860; III 1101-1102). The instructors who at that time unquestionably had power to direct, discipline, and recommend the discharge of employees, also warned employees that those who joined the ILGWU would be discharged and urged employees not to give their money "to those foreigners" (X 3860; III 1047-1048, 1063, 1069, 1090; IV 1150-1151, 1323, 1325-1326, 1331). One instructor referred to the ILGWU members as "scum" (X 3860; III 1070; IV 1331).

A substantial number of the employees who joined the ILGWU were laid off or discharged shortly after joining. In June, 1934, about a dozen employees attended a dinner at the home of Mrs. Yarnell, an employee who had joined the ILGWU, for the purpose of discussing that labor organization (X 3860-3861; III 1036-1037, 1046-1051, 1098; IV 1153). Mrs. Yarnell was discharged in July, 1934, although she had worked for the Company since December, 1924 (X 3861; III 1046-1049). Within a few months thereafter, all except one of the girls who had attended the dinner were either laid off or discharged (X 3861; III 1037-1040, 1042-1044, 1051). As a result of these lay-offs or discharges, the ILGWU filed a charge against the Company under Section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, alleging that eight employees had been laid off because they joined the ILGWU (X 3861; IV 1316-1317). A hearing of these charges was held in the spring of 1935, but, before a decision issued, the National Industrial Recovery Act was declared unconstitutional by this Court (X 3861; III 1032-1110a; IV 1318).

In the latter part of 1934 and the first part of 1935, all the remaining employees who were known to have joined the ILGWU were transferred from the Company's main plant to a temporary branch, and laid off when the branch closed down in June, 1935, despite the fact that most of these girls had several years service with the Company, whereas employees in the main plant with less service were retained (X 3861; III 1062-1066, 1073-1077; IV 1120uu-1120vv, 1126v-1129, 1130d-1130e, 1132-1136, 1156b-1157, 1323-1327, 1332-1334).

The Board expressly refused to make any finding as to whether the discharges and lay-offs were discriminatory (X 3860, note 25); however, it did find on the testimony of some of the employees, that as a result of the sequence of events above related, employees became afraid to join, admit their membership in, or discuss the ILGWU (X 3861; III 1044-1046, 1057-1048, 1080-1081, 1141-1142).

The Loyalty League.

In February, 1935, while the charges before the NIRA were pending, the Company formed what was called the Nelly Don Loyalty League, for the purpose of combatting the efforts of the International to organize the workers of the Company. The League and its officers continued to control and dominate the labor relations of the Company and its employees from its formation down to the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union in April, 1937, as will be shown as we proceed with this statement.

In February, 1935, a meeting of about fifty employees was held at the home of Mrs. Gray, manager of the Company's retail store (X 3861; IX 3336; X 3572, 3644-3645), at which time and place she and Mrs. Strickland, head of the Company's pattern department (X 3861; IX 3233; X 3850), formed the Loyalty League (X 3861; III 798d-798e; X 78, 3336, 3439). Within the next three days, membership cards were circulated and signed by substantially all of the Company's employees (X 3861-3862; III 798e), including all of the Company's supervisory employees, Sales Manager Keyes, Employment Manager Hyde, Production Manager Reeves and Production Engineer Atchison (X 3859, 3860, 3863; I 407; II 429, 431, 533, 551; III 1091, 1097, 1108, 1113, 1117). Mrs. Strickland, in circulating the cards, stated that Mrs. Reed "would close her doors before she would have a union shop, and we should sign these cards to keep our jobs, and keep us in work, because she would close the doors (X 3862; III 1078). Accompanying the circulation of the membership cards was the following statement (I 42; III 798d):

> "We protest against, and will resist, all attempts of outside interference with the business of said Company, or with our relations to the Company as employees.
>
> We recognize the fact that * * * we have had generous and fair treatment from Nell Don (Mrs. Reed), president of the Company, and we repose our confidence in her rather than in professional agitators who are sent here to create discontent among employees of the Company."

The League was formed and the said statement was circulated with the evident intent of interfering with and influencing testimony to be heard on the charges filed with the Board created under the National Industrial Recovery Act and to bar the International from the plant (X 3861; IV 1316, 1317, 1318; III 1032-1110A). The said purpose was evidenced by the conduct of Mrs. Strickland in refusing to allow Virginia Stroup, who was president of the International local, organized among the employees of the Company, to become a member of the Loyalty League (X 3862; III 1078-1079). Virginia Stroup testified before the trial examiner at the first hearing with the following colloquy:

> "Well, the day that Mrs. Gray came over with Mrs. Strickland with the Loyalty League cards, * * * And Mrs. Gray was holding the cards in her hand just like that * * * Fan shape. And I asked Mrs. Gray what they were, and Mrs. Strickland took up the conversation then. She said that Mrs. Donnelly would close her doors before she would have a union shop, and we should sign these cards to keep our jobs, and keep us in work because she would close the doors and thus throw all the girls out of employment.
>
> So I started to take one of the cards like this, but she had her thumb holding it until I couldn't get it. She says, 'Virginia, we would like to have you in our organization, but you can't carry water on both shoulders.' She says, 'There are no dues in this Loyalty League, and you can't belong to an organization that you pay dues to and belong to the Loyalty League.'".

Meetings of the League were regularly held on the second floor of the building (X 3862; I 39-40, 309; VIII 2666; IX 3033, 3067). Notices of said meetings were given to the employees by the supervisory personnel of the Company, and over the Company's communication facilities (X 3862; I 308-309; III 1011; IX 3337, 3344, 3435).

Each section of the plant had a representative, elected during working hours by the employees in the section, to represent them in the League (X 3862-3863, 139; II 378j-378r; III 798e; VIII 2888-2889; IX 3032-3033, 3114). The League had songs of loyalty and sponsored the wearing of pins bearing the initial "L" as a demonstration of loyalty to Mrs. Reed (X 3863; I 319-320; II 542; VIII 2581, 2608-2609, 2694, 2843; X 3572).

That the Loyalty League, organized as aforesaid by the management employees of the Company, and for the purpose of preventing any of the employees from joining an independent labor union, appeared in and dominated many situations involving labor relations of the Company and its employees, down to and through the organization of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, will abundantly appear as this statement proceeds.

(2) From the effective date of the Act to the formation of the plant union, July 5th, 1935, to April 27th, 1937.

From the time that the hearing of the charges against the Company, before the National Industrial Recovery Board, was ended by the invalidation of the NIRA, down to the early part of 1937, the International, so far as the Record shows, made no effort to organize the employees of the Company. But the Loyalty League was meeting and was on the job in promoting the objective of its formation, to-wit, to keep the employees out of an independent labor union (X 3864; IX 2607-2608, 3572).

Ross Todd, whom the trial examiner found to be "acting for and on behalf of the" Company (X 3858), early in 1937 was elected president of the Loyalty League. And from that time down through the period covered by the evidence produced at the hearings before the trial examiner, while parading under the disguise of representing the employees in their labor relations, she was in fact, as will abundantly appear as this statement proceeds, working in the interest of the management.

On February 26, 1937, there appeared in the Kansas City Star an article stating that the ILGWU had announced a campaign to organize the Company's employees (X 3864; III 1019).

The Loyalty Petition.

On March 2, 1937, less than a week after the International had announced, as aforesaid, that it would again take up the business of organizing the Company's employees, two women from the shipping department, Mary Sprofera and Inez Warren on Company time, went through the entire plant, and from machine to machine, and circulated what has become known in this case as the "Loyalty petition" (X 3865); V 1623-1641; I 311-312, 354-354a; II 594, 602; VIII 2578, 4609-2615, 2637-2638; 2725). The Loyalty petition read as follows:

> "We, the undersigned, as members of the Donnelly Garment Company, wish to make it known we are positively happy and contented with the positions which we hold with the organization, and refuse to accept any labor organization. We are thankful for the real humanitarian interest extended by our employer, Mrs. Reed."

Three employees refused to sign; Elsie Greenhaw, for the reasons as stated by her (X 3865; II 377):

> "Q. Now, on March 2, 1937, when this so-called Loyalty petition was sent around, you declined to sign it? A. Yes, sir.
>
> Q. And you declined on the ground that it contained in it the statement 'and refuse to acknowledge any labor organization'? A. That is right. * * *

I felt, as an employee of the Donnelly Garment Company, I had a right to believe in a union, or not, as I pleased."

Sylvia Hull refused to sign the petition when it was first passed around among the sewing girls. She testified (V 1354-1355):

"Well, she (Mary Sprofera) came down through the section and had this petition and she asked us to read it over and then she said it was not compulsory that we sign the petition, and I read it over and it said that we were satisfied with hours and conditions in the factory, and I was not satisfied with the hours, and told her that I did not think that I would sign the petition. So we had talked among the other employees that if we did not sign this petition we would lose our jobs * * * (V 1355). Well, after she came through the first time and we did not sign, this other girl and I, then we decided that if we did not sign that that we— * * * The substance of it was that if we did not sign the petition we would lose our jobs. Then this same girl came back through the section a few days later and she said, 'I think I missed you girls when I came through the other day,' and I told her no, she didn't miss me, but I said that I would sign the petition then; and I told her that the reason I did not sign it was because we were working 53 hours a week and that I thought that was too much, but I signed it at that time. Then she (Mrs. Hyde, employment manager) called us down to the nurse's room."

"Q. How did she call you? A. Well, as near as I remember the instructor—they have a telephone in each section, the instructor told us to go down. Anyway we were called down.

Q Do you recall any further conversation upon this occasion when Mrs Hyde was present? Did anything else happen in this conversation in the nurse's room? A Yes; she called us down there and told us that she intended to take our names off and we insisted that she leave the names on in order to hold our jobs and she said no, that she would not do that, so she did take our names off, and I told her then that that was too long to work, and she said well, that she didn't have any say as to the hours they worked and she said, well, we would just forget about that" (V 1355-1356).

Mrs. Hull did lose her job on April 23, 1937 (X 3870; V 1356).

Marguerite Keyes, at the time of the circulation of the said Loyalty petition, was the office manager, and handled the finances of the Company (X 3640). A few days after March 2, Mrs. Keyes was in Mrs. Reed's home, who showed her the petition. Mrs. Reed told her that she would like to have the petition one hundred per cent. She testified (X 3641-2):

"Q. Who was not on the petition at that time? A. Well, I know they didn't have the officers and some of the executives of the Company. I don't recall just the people that were not on there; however, I do know they didn't have the tenth floor.

Q. What did you do after that, in that respect? A. Mrs. Reed told me she would like to have that petition one hundred per cent, and whether I went back to the office that day or not, I do not recall; but the next day I did suggest to one of the girls in the office that she take this petition around and have it signed.

Q. Who was that girl? A. Pauline Shartzer.

* * * * * * * * *

Q. Was she in the department of which you were the head? A. Yes, she was.

Q. Do you know whether Pauline Shartzer did circulate the petition then? A. Yes, she did."

As a result, everyone in the plant, including the full supervisory force, watchmen, porters, maids, stenographers, indeed, every employee except the three heretofore mentioned, signed the pledge (X 3866; A 388; IV 1288-1289; V 1643-1649; VII 3432-3433; VIII 2947-2955; IX 3335; X 3642-3644). The examiner found and the Board approved that under all the circumstances the Company, by permitting Mary Sprofera and Inez Warren, and requesting Pauline Shartzer to circulate the pledges in the factory during working hours and by requesting that additional signatures be secured, gave approval and lent assistance and encouragement to the solicitation of the employees to pledge themselves not to join the International, and thereby interfered with, restrained and coerced them in the free exercise of a collective bargaining agent (X 3866).

Every time the International got any publicity with reference to organizing the employees of the Company, the Company's officials and supervisory family got busy in an effort to check the International.

The March 18th, 1937, Meeting.

On March 6, 1937, the Kansas City Journal-Post carried an article stating that David Dubinsky, president of the International, at a meeting of 700 union members in Kansas City, had officially launched a movement to organize employees of the Company (X 3866; III 1021). The International, on March 9, 1937, sent the Company a letter requesting a bargaining conference (X 3866-3867; III 1022-1024). The Company did not reply to that letter, but Mrs. Reed, president of the Company, on March 18, 1937, read the letter to a mass meeting of employees called by the subservient company-organized and dominated Loyalty League (X 3867-3869; I 48-49, 147-148, 310, 354b-354c; II 588; VIII 3620). Rose Todd, president of the League, called the meeting. Rose Todd presided at the meeting. Chairs for the meeting were rented from the Kansas City Chair Rental Company and paid for by the Loyalty League (X 3867; I 44i, I 334w, 345; III 960, 962; V 1621). The meeting was held during working hours in the building in which the plant was located (X 3867; I 308-309; IX 3328-3330, 3438, 3454, 3457-3458; X 3575, 3666). Most of the supervisory force were in attendance at the meeting, including Ella Mae Hyde, employment manager; Martha Gray, outlet store manager, and Elizabeth Reeves, merchandise manager, and the instructors and thread girls. (X 3867; I 309-310; II 534; IX 3328-3329, 3438). The principal business of the meeting was the reading of the letter of March 9 from the International, by Mrs. Reed, and a speech by Mrs. Reed in which she stated that the Company was going to devise ways and means of protecting the employees from the violence which she attempted to lead the employees to believe was about to descend upon them at the hands of the International. She stated that she was not going to permit "Dubinsky or any other buttinsky" to intimidate her or the Company into forcing the employees to join the International against their will." She spoke of the so-called "Loyalty Petition," which had been circulated in the factory on March 2, and which stated, among other things, that the employees "refused to acknowledge any union labor organization," as follows:

> "I have had lots of nice things happen to me in my lifetime, but have never had anything that made me so proud and so happy as the list of names that came to my house" (X 3867-3868; III 1029-1030).

The examiner found and the Board approved (X 3868-9):

"Through the presence of supervisors and the sponsorship of the League, which had for its purpose the exclusion of outside union organization for the factory, the employees must inevitably have been aware of the anti-union character of the meeting and could not have been free to express their independent views. * * * Mrs. Reed's remarks indicated that the ILGWU was the common enemy of both the respondent and its employees. * * * While Mrs. Reed sought to appear as a disinterested defender of the respondent's employees in the exercise of their right to join or not join a labor organization, against the background of the respondent's widely publicized hostility to the ILGWU and the past repeated reminders to the employees that "loyalty" to the respondent demanded repudiation of outside union organizations, the undersigned is convinced that Mrs. Reed's remarks made it plain that the respondent's attitude toward unionization had not changed, and the membership of any of the employees in the ILGWU was not to be tolerated.

The undersigned finds that by the sponsorship and domination of the March 18 meeting and by Mrs. Reed's talk at said meeting, the respondent interfered with, restrained and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act."

The April 23rd, 1937, Demonstrations.

On April 22, 1937, a local newspaper carried an announcement by the International that Sylvia Hull, one of the Company operators, had been named as a delegate to the bi-annual convention of the International at Atlantic City (X 3869; III 1015). On the next morning, from the time Mrs. Hull arrived at work until she was removed from her machine by Mrs. Hyde, employment manager, she was subjected to a continuous anti-union demonstration (X 3869-3870; II 535, 541-542d; IV 2339; V 1350; IX 3013-3015, 3475-3480; X 3517). Although Mrs. Hull sat at her machine sewing and did nothing to provoke any hostility, girls from all over the plant came in groups to her place of work on the 8th floor of the plant (X 3870; IV 1340-1343, 1349-1350; VIII 2656-2657, 2693, 2926-2927, 2991-2993; IX 3013-3015). They told Mrs. Hull that she could not belong to the International and demanded that she surrender her Loyalty League pin (X 3870; IV 1346-1347, 1349; IX 3013-3014, 3036, 3042-3043). Some of the girls stood on nearby tables (X 3870; V 1346-1347). They sang songs and booed (X 3870; V 1346; VIII 2665, 2693; IX 3419-3490). Although Mrs. Allison, instructor of the section in which Mrs. Hull worked, was present throughout the demonstration, she did not order the girls back to work or take any kind of action (X 3870; II 663-664; V 1341-1350; X 3573). After the demonstration had continued for sometime, Employment Manager Hyde appeared. After watching the demonstration for a short time she ordered the girls to return to work; when they refused to do so, she removed Mrs. Hull from the floor and sent her home (X 3870; II 535-536; IV 1340; V 1343, 1356-1357; X 3517, 3573).

On the same day Fern Sigler came to work for the first time displaying her International membership pin and also wearing a Loyalty League pin (X 3870; I 319). She was subjected to a demonstration similar in character to that to which Mrs. Hull had been subjected (X 3870; I 70-72; III 315-316, 321-322; X 3666-3667). Mrs. Sigler attempted, throughout the demonstrations, to continue sewing, and even when Production Manager Batty, accompanied by Rose Todd, ordered Mrs. Sigler to his office, she expressed the desire to remain at her work (X 3871; II 442-445, 497-499). Beatty, however, commanded her to go to his office and she complied (X 3871; II 444).

The Inquisition of Fern Sigler in the Company's Office Presided Over by Rose Todd (April 23, 1937).

In the office Mrs. Sigler was confronted by Rose Todd, president of the Loyalty League, and as the Board has found, a representative of the management; Lee Batty, production manager, and Ella Mae Hyde, employment manager, all of whom took her to task for joining the International. Miss Todd took charge of the inquisition and in the presence and with the approval of Batty and Hyde, she proceeded to tell Mrs. Sigler what the Company's policy was with reference to labor unions (X 3871; III, 801-807). Rose Todd, at that inquisition, speaking to Mrs. Sigler, said:

"R. Todd (III 803): What do you think you have gained that we haven't by joining the union?

F. Sigler: Shorter working hours.

* * * * * *

R. Todd: Nobody is going to do any violence against you. If you want to go home, all right. You got yourself in it and you can stay in it or get out if you want to get out. As president of the Loyalty League, I am not going to try to sell you on the idea that we are right, but the majority will certainly rule in a case like this. You expect the majority to rule if they believe like you; we expect it to rule when they believe like we do. We have had no violence and we don't intend to have any violence.

R. Todd (III 805): Did you join because you really wanted to join?

F. Sigler: Yes, I certainly did. I have a mind of my own and I don't let anybody control it.

Mr. Baty: Do you think the union will give you better working conditions and better treatment personally?

F. Sigler: I wouldn't say. I don't know.

Mr. Baty: The thing that I am interested in is that if there are any particular conditions here that are not right, I want to correct them.

R. Todd: It has always been the practice here that if we had any complaints to make, we made them. If we don't make them we certainly can't straighten them out.

F. Sigler: You can do things I don't have the authority to do.

R. Todd: I have no authority * * * My advice to you is, if you feel that strongly about the union and have enough people to back you up, be in a union shop. I wouldn't any more think that I could join the union and get by with it than the man in the moon. I'd expect to be put out in the street and left there. You can't expect any organization to revolve around one or two people. There are 1,200 of us. I have no way of knowing how many of you there are but it is very evident that it is not a majority. I talked to some of the girls last night and asked them to be quiet about it and they went away thinking they would. When they all got together they couldn't stand it. What do you think you had better do?

F. Sigler: I don't know.

R. Todd: Didn't you expect this to happen when you told everybody you belonged to the union?

F. Sigler: I didn't see why it should.

R. Todd: Did you think you had enough people here to back you up? What did you expect? I never tried anything in my life the majority didn't rule. We went downstairs and sent those girls back to work and they went back to work.

F. Sigler: Didn't I have a right to join this union? As long as I don't bother anyone, what business is it of theirs if I belong? * * *

R. Todd (III 807): We are going to run an open shop as long as the majority feels that way. The majority is going to rule, as always.

Mr. Baty: I am going to ask you to go home temporarily and Mrs. Hyde will call you back when I think it is safe for you to come back."

Mrs. Sigler never did go back to work for the Company.

Mrs. Hull never did go back to work for the Company.

The examiner found and the Board approved:

> "That the respondent approved of and encouraged the demonstrations and took advantage of them to reveal once more to the employees its hostility to the ILGWU and its support of anti-ILGWU activities. Further, that by such acts the respondent interfered with, restrained and coerced its employees of the rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act" (X 3871).

Heretofore in this statement we have marshaled evidence from the record tending to prove that the Company, since the advent of the International into Kansas City in early 1934, has been constantly on the alert to keep the International out of the Company plant.

First, by acts preceding the effective date of the Act, such as the surveillance of meetings held by the International in Kansas City, by discharging and otherwise disciplining employees who joined or favored the International, by supervisory employees disparaging and belittling the International and its officers.

Second, by the formation of the Nelly Don Loyalty League in February, 1935, while the charges of the International against the Company were pending before the National Industrial Recovery Labor Board, for the avowed purpose of keeping the employees of the Company out of the International and out of any labor union.

Third, by the circulation of the so-called "Loyalty Petition" on March 2, 1937, following publicity to the effect that the International was preparing to organize the employees of the Company, which petition stated that "We * * * refuse to accept any labor organization."

Fourth, by holding a mass meeting on March 18, following further publicity to the effect that the International was preparing to organize the employees of the Company, at which mass meeting the president of the Company made a speech disparaging and belittling the International and its officers and attempting to frighten the employees into believing that the International was intent upon doing violence to them, and by praising the employees for signing the Loyalty pledge "refusing to accept any labor organization."

Fifth, by staging and encouraging demonstrations on April 23, 1937, around the machines of two girls who had joined the International and by severing the employment of said girls with the Company.

(3) The Formation of the Plant Union.

We now come to the culmination of all of the events heretofore described to the objective of the Company's anti-union, anti-International policy, the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, herein called the plant union.

The plant union was conceived by, organized by, financed by, and it has been controlled and dominated by the Company.

Prior to April 12, 1937, the date upon which the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the National Labor Relations Act, the Company had evidently assumed that the Act would be declared unconstitutional for it conducted its labor relations just as though the Act were not in existence and as though it were no protection to the employees, against discrimination because of union activities, and no protection to them and their right to join labor organizations of their own choosing (X 3872 3873; III 824).

Three employees, including Miss Todd, employed an attorney, Mr. Frank Tyler. They paid him a retainer fee of $500, as they stated, to bring some sort of an injunction suit against the International. On April 1, 1937, Rose Todd went to the First National Bank in Kansas City, Missouri, and borrowed $1,000 upon the unsecured note of the Nelly Don Loyalty League, and deposited the money to the account of the Loyalty League in said bank. She, as president, and Pauline Hartman, as the treasurer of the Loyalty League, issued a check on said account in the name of the Loyalty League for $500, which they gave to Mr. Tyler (X 3872; II 556-577; III 959; I 179; II 378i-378q; III 949). No such injunction suit was ever filed, but the $500 was kept by Mr. Tyler and applied by him on his fee for his help in organizing the plant union (X 3785, Note 44; III 927-928). At the meeting of the group chairmen of the plant union, on June 15, 1937, as shown by the minutes of said meeting, the following colloquy occurred:

> "Q. I understand people are saying that we paid Mr. Tyler $500 to organize our union?
>
> Rose Todd: As you know, and as we have explained quite thoroughly, we paid Mr. Tyler $500 retainer's fee. He helped us write our By-Laws and Working Agreement, and will advise us and help us when we need it."

The financial records of the plant union show that no other money was paid to Mr. Tyler after the check of April 1, 1937, until November 23, 1937 (X 3875).

On April 27, 1937, a meeting was held on the unoccupied second floor of the building in which the Company maintained its factory, at which meeting the plant union was organized. The employees were ordered to go to the meeting by their instructors and other supervisory employees. The meeting was held during working hours and the employees were paid by the Company for the time which they lost because of attending the meeting. Mrs. Lola Skeens testified at the second hearing in 1942 that at the time of the organization of the plant union, and for a long time prior thereto, she was in the employ of the Company as an instructor; that she was so employed for 15 years prior to leaving the Company on September 19, 1941 (IX 3426). She testified (IX 3420):

> "Q. Did you attend the meeting at which the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union was organized? A. I did.
>
> Q. Did you know before you got to that meeting that a union was going to be formed at the meeting? A. I did.
>
> Q. How did you learn of that? A. Mrs. Wherry told me. (Mrs. Wherry was factory-manager.)
>
> Q. Do you know how the girls working in your section learned of the meeting? A. I told them . . .
>
> Q. At what time of day was the meeting held? A. I am not sure what exact time. It was around 2:30, I think.
>
> Q. Did the girls in your section wear their uniforms to the meeting? A. Yes.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> Q. Did you go to the meetings with the girls in your section? A. Yes, I did.
>
> Q. Did you sit with them at the meetings A. Part of them.
>
> Q. Were the girls in your section paid for the time they spent at that meeting? A. They was.

Q. Was an entry made on the girl's card to show she was to be paid? A. There was.

Q. Did you see that entry? A. Yes."

Mrs. Etta Dorsey, an instructor in the employ of the Company from October, 1927, to March, 1942, gave similar testimony (IX 3329).

Typewritten minutes kept by the plant union of the meetings and typewritten minutes kept by the group chairmen of the plant union, were subpoenaed at the first hearing in 1939, and they appear in Volume III of the Record, on page 821 through 946. Much of the evidence supporting the facts found by the examiner are contained in those written minutes kept by the plant union itself.

The minutes of the meeting of April 27, at which the plant union was organized, appear in Volume III, pages 821 to 830, inclusive. They show that the meeting was presided over by Rose Todd, who was at said time the president of the Loyalty League. The first addressed the meeting in part as follows:

> "I believe everyone is present and it certainly is a very gratifying sight to see this many of us together again.
>
> As chairman of the committee of employees, I have called this meeting this afternoon to discuss a matter of vital importance to us as employees.
>
> Several weeks ago it seemed to me that it was necessary to obtain some legal advice for us. After considering where we could obtain that advice we decided to ask Mr. A. Gossett and Mr. F. E. Tylor to act as attorneys for the employees.
>
> I have known Mr. Gossett and Mr. Tyler personally for years. More and more these past few weeks it has seemed to me that we are approaching a time when it will be necessary to form an organization that will give us the protection that we need,

Your first question no doubt is, 'Won't the Loyalty League do that?' My answer is, 'It will not'—because the Loyalty League is purely a social organization that we want to keep alive and going, and this will be a business organization to take care of our problems and give us representation to definitely confer with the proper representatives of our Company at times when we feel that it is necessary * * * We have been trying to think of a name to call this organization, because as many of the details as we can should be worked out today. I have this suggestion to make (and we have also talked this over with Mr. Tyler), and we have agreed that it is a good one. Our new organization will be called DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION * * *

My first personal distress was the use of the word 'union.' You probably do not like it any better than I did but you must see by this time that to meet the demand that can be made by outside unions that our organization will have to be a union.

* * * * * * *

Now, Mr. Tyler is here with us this afternoon, and I am going to ask him to make a little explanation to you and to talk to you for a few minutes. Mr. Tyler.

Mr. Tyler: Ladies and Gentlemen. I am appearing before you in a rather unusual position this afternoon. Some weeks ago several employees came to my office and employed Mr. Gosseft and myself as legal advisors of the employees, so that I am, in fact, at this moment, acting as attorney for you or for many of you, even though you have never seen me before * * *

I am not here to discuss the question of whether a labor union is or is not a good thing. You may believe in unions or you may disbelieve in unions, and still agree with the advice I am now about to offer you."

He then proceeded to advise the employees to form an unaffiliated plant union:

(824) "I do not think this action can or will be considered as any act of unfriendliness to your employer. I believe they recognize your right to take this step, and that it isn't an unfriendly act to them. In fact, it is much better for them and for yourselves, for you to have your own union with your own representatives, rather than have a group here trying to represent outsiders from New York and another group here representing some other outside union, etc. * * *

If your verdict is in favor of the formation of that union, I should then like to present a brief form of by-laws and recommend them to you. They would, of course, be subject to your change when and if you see fit."

The By-Laws were read and unanimously adopted without argument or comment; and have never been changed. Rose Todd then resumed speaking, as follows (826):

"While we are together as an entire group of employees let's form this organization. I want to ask, then, for a motion to be made that we form a union at this meeting."

The minutes show (page 826) a motion made by Ethel Reigel that "We form an independent, unaffiliated plant union at this meeting." Seconded by Arch Lyle.

"All in favor make it known by saying 'I.'" (Unanimous.)

"That was very gratifying to me and I am sure it will be to each one of you. The next thing we should take up, and I should like to ask for a motion to be made that we select or appoint a nominating committee to retire from the room and take enough time, any amount that is necessary, to bring back to us a group of chairmen to act as officers for our union."

(Motion made by Lena Faulconer that a nominating committee be appointed to select a general chairman and eight group chairmen to represent our independent union to act as officers of our union. Seconded by Eva Lieberman.)

"All in favor make it known by saying 'I.'" (Unanimous.)

Whereupon Rose Todd proceeded to appoint a committee of five. Miss Todd then requested the nominating committee to retire from the room after instructing them how to spread the group chairmen through the various departments of the plant. She stated:

"I am going to ask this committee of five people, with Mrs. Riggs acting as chairman, to leave the room —I think the best place for you would be the Recreation Room on the third floor. (The Recreation Room was a part of the Company's plant.)"

Thereupon Rose Todd caused the membership cards, which had been specially prepared in advance for the meeting, to be passed among the employees present. She said:

"I have a card here that I am going to read to you, and after a while I am going to ask Mr. Tyler to read to you the By-Laws that he has drawn up for us to use for our union organization and it may be that those things will be changed a little, but we could not very well have this meeting today without having our By-Laws read to us. I am going to ask the boys to pass these cards out and they will take them up later during the meeting. (Reading) I hereby agree to become a charter member of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, and to abide by its By-Laws and regulations.

This is not just for fun, it is all business now. Any of the cards that you do not pass out, please bring back to the platform. Do not take any of these up yet. I am going to ask you to be patient as the meeting goes along because we have several things yet to take care of. Remember, you do not have to sign these cards unless you want to."

Miss Todd then requested Mr. Tyler to read the By-Laws.

"Mr. Tyler: I wish you would keep in mind as I read these By-Laws that the last thing I want to do is cram anything down your throats if you don't want it. These are your By-Laws, and your union—not mine. If you want to you can decide that a woman has to wear a striped dress or a polka dot scarf to belong to your union, and because we decided to take prompt action does not mean that we are trying to force you to agree to anything. I do suggest, though, that if we tried to discuss the individual viewpoints of each of you we would be here next Monday morning. If these will do at all temporarily, I hope you will adopt them and later talk them over. I assure you that a majority of you may amend them, whenever you make up your minds to do so. I suggest you adopt them and then leisurely amend them when the majority of you wish them changed."

(The minutes of the meeting of the plant union immediately following on May 11, 1937 (III 836), contain the following:

"Question: If a new employee comes in are you going to set a time before they have to become a member of the union?

Answer: Anybody coming to work for us will join the union immediately. If there is any doubt in their minds about whether or not they want to join our union, then there is some doubt in their minds as to whether or not they want to work here."

(The closed shop contract was not signed until May 27, 1937.)

Mr. Tyler then proceeded to read the prepared By-Laws. He stated (III 829):

> "This union will not finance what some unions finance. You are not financing for the support of some strike in this, or some other city. In that case you don't need any large dues (25c per month in the By-Laws; which can possibly be reduced to 15c).
>
> I suggest that if the By-Laws are satisfactory someone move they are adopted."

(Motion made by Ellen Nokes that we accept the By-Laws as they were read. Seconded by Virginia White. Unanimous acceptance.)

Miss Todd announced the return of the nominating committee. Mrs. Riggs, chairman of that committee, reported the names of the nominees.

> "Miss Rose Todd: You have heard the names of the general chairman (Miss Todd), and the group chairman, which I will not repeat, but I will ask that a motion be made that these chairmen be accepted as a group."

(A motion by Hazel Sauke that we accept these chairmen as a group; seconded by Anna Reese. Unanimous decision.)

Miss Todd then proceeded:

> "I am going to ask at this meeting that each of these new chairmen come to the platform.
>
> Our meetings as an entire group of employees are not so frequent, and I thought it would be a very opportune time for me to present the new chairmen that will act as our representation at any time that is necessary."

The other meetings as an entire group of employees since February, 1935, had been of the Nelly Don Loyalty League.)

(Presentation of committee chairmen.)

"I want to ask everyone to remain seated now until we have taken up these cards, and have no one leave the meeting until we are dismissed. Will the boys please take up the cards now? Has everyone had a card? If not, please stand.

I have just a few words more that I want to say. If at any time you feel that there are little things going on that should be reported to the committee, please feel free to do so. Is there anything else that should come before this meeting? If not, the meeting will stand adjourned."

So was formed the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union.

May Stevens testified at the hearing in 1942 that she had worked for the Company off and on since sometime in 1932 until after the period covered by the evidence in this case (July 15, 1939).

On cross-examination by Mr. Tyler she testified as follows (Vol. X 3691-2):

"Q. When you stated this morning that you went along with the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union at the beginning because you thought it would mean your job, did you mean that you believed that at that time you would be discharged if you had not joined? A. Yes, that is what I believed.

Q. What did you base that belief on? A. The Fern Sigler incident.

Q. Did you believe that the overwhelming majority of the employees wanted this union and would get a closed shop contract, and for that reason you would have to join or lose your job? * * *. A. No, not in that sense of the word, about the overwhelming majority. It was because that we went in that meeting unprepared, and they just as much as forced us to join it.

By Mr. Tyler:

Q. What do you mean by 'just as much as forced you to join it?'? A. We were handed cards and they told them to count them and see that every card was accounted for and handed back.

Q. And the fact that the cards were accounted for, in your mind, means that you were forced to join? A. Yes.

Q. Weren't you told in that meeting that you were to do as you pleased, and nobody was to sign a card that didn't want to, or if anybody wanted to think it over, he was to keep it? A. Perhaps so, but we knew differently."

Miss Stevens was then shown an affidavit which she, with other employees had signed, to the effect that she had joined the plant union of her own free will and accord.

Continued Cross-Examination by Mr. Tyler.

"Q. You have said you signed it? A. Yes.

Q. Was that statement true or false when you signed it? A. It was false, because it wasn't my free wish to join it, or what I chose to do of my free will.

Q. You understood that you swore to it at that time? A. Yes, but it wasn't my wish, because I called the Ladies' Garment Workers' that night and had them come out and signed the other card, the one that was of my own free choice.

Q. When did you again talk with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union? A. That night.

Q. You had never been in touch with them before? A. No, I called them immediately upon going home.

Mr. Hoggsett: What date is that? A. I believe I didn't make myself clear. The night the Company union was formed, that was not my free wish, joining the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, because upon going home that night, April 27, I called the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and signed a card that night."

The By-Laws adopted by the meeting (X 4864; III 798F-799, 800) provided that members of the plant union "shall not be members of any other labor union."

On May 27, 1937 (X 3879; III 807-811), the Company and the plant union entered into a contract providing for a closed shop as follows (809):

> "The employer agrees that on and after June 5, 1937, no one of its employees shall be retained in its employ who is not a member of this union. It is further agreed that hereafter no person shall be employed by the employer who does not, at or prior to such employment, sign an application for membership in this union, and no such person shall be retained as an employee who shall not, within two weeks after such employment begins, be accepted by this union as a member.
>
> It is further agreed that no one shall be continued as an employee after such person shall have resigned from or ceased to belong to this union either by voluntary retirement or expulsion."

The door was now completely closed to the International. The By-Laws provided, among other things (X 3874; III 798F), that

> "The purpose of this organization shall be * * * the protection of employees and members of this union from coercion, intimidation, violence or threats of violence in order to force them to join unions organized and dominated by outsiders not employees in this plant."

Everybody in the plant, department managers, instructors, supervisors, with the exception of a half dozen executives, joined the organization at the meeting on April 27, or shortly thereafter (X 3875-3877; I 99, 131, 136, II 421, 424-424b, 428-429, 510, 715-716, 718d-718e, III 743-763, 830, 854, 865-866, 868-870, 875-882, 887, 891-894, 897-900, 909-911, 1003-1005, 1007, 1011, 1032, 1091, V 1349-1350, VII 2175, 2256-2257, VIII 2671-2672, 2676-2677, 2680, 2689, 2733, 2911-2912, 2914, 2949-2953, 2961-2962, IX 3157, 3316, 3426-3427, 3435-3436, 3445-3446, 3450, X 3644, 3649-3650, 3671, 3673, 3675).

Instructors and thread girls were supervisory employees.

The very large majority of the employees in the plant were sewing girls (I 137), or rather machine operators (in 1939 there were 642), divided into sections with forty operators each, and one instructor, and one thread girl, who the Board found, and who the evidence abundantly shows, was an assistant instructor and supervisor. In 1939 there were forty-four instructors (III 138). The instructors and supervisors all joined and remained members of the Union (I 138).

The Company and the Plant Union contended that the instructors and thread girls were not supervisors, that they had no authority to either supervise or discipline any of the machine operators or other employees. The proof that they were supervisors, and as such representatives of the management at all the times covered by the evidence before the Board in this case, was overwhelming (X 3851). It is admitted that they were such until the advent of Baty into the plant in June, 1935, at which time he claimed to have taken away from them all of their supervisory authority (IV 450-451). The Board found that it is plain from all circumstances disclosed by the record that after June, 1935, the instructors and thread girls continued in their capacity as supervisors in charge of the operators who worked in the various sewing sections of the factory (X 3851).

Elizabeth Reeves, production manager until succeeded by Baty on June 30, 1935, testified in the N.I.R.A. hearing in 1935 (R. III 1060), as follows:

> "Nobody is let out of the Donnelly Garment Company unless four people pass on it. After we decide that we have to lay off a certain group or a number of people, we go over our records with the instructor and she makes the recommendation, because she is in close touch with the operator and knows the type of work the operator does and whether she is efficient, obedient, cooperative and reliable. After the instructor makes that selection it is checked by Mrs. Wherry, who is in charge of our factory, who knows what is going on in every section of the place. * * * I expect certain things of those instructors; they have to get out a certain quantity of work in order to make our factory efficient and I certainly expect to get out quality. Well, I cannot expect them then to keep people in their sections that won't cooperate and won't help them to maintain the quality and standard of our work."

That testimony was given at a hearing when there was no issue as to the supervisory capacity of instructors and thread girls. Of course, if the instructors and thread girls, at the time of and following, the organization of the Plant Union, had the authority described by Mrs. Reeves in her 1935 testimony, there could be no defense to the charge that the Plant Union was Company-dominated and controlled. But, Lee Baty, who became production manager in June, 1935, testified (II 450) as follows:

"By Mr. Ingraham:

Mr. Baty, after you took charge of the production of the factory, did you make any changes in reference to the method of production, or the plan of work? A. I did.

Q. I direct your attention to the work of the instructors. What, if anything, did you change in regard to their duties? A. I changed the work of the instructors, I would say, to a very great extent. Prior to the time I took them, they were considered more or less supervisors, and entered into the discussion and recommendations as to the ability of different operators and made different recommendations as to which operators would be recalled after they were laid off, and after I took over the plant, I put instructors strictly on a basis of an instructor, and they were there to assist the operator in the performance of their work and nothing else. They had no supervision over the girls, and it was none of their concern as to how the girls performed. They were to give them the work, take it away from them when it was finished, show them how to do it, if they didn't know how, and that was the extent that they were held liable for the girls in the section.

Q. Now, Mr. Baty, when did you put that plan into operation? A. That plan was put into operation, as near as I can remember, about the month of July, 1935."

Neither the Company nor the Plant Union put any instructor on the stand at either hearing who testified that her authority had ever been changed or lessened by Baty or anyone else, either in June or July, 1935, or at any other time. The Company called an instructor, Mary Copowycz, as a witness in rebuttal in 1942, after a number of Board witnesses (as hereinafter shown) had testified that no change had been made in the instructor's duties or authority since Mrs. Reeves' above quoted testimony. But they asked her no such question. The Board put two instructors on the witness stand, who testified that they had been with the Company many years prior to the advent of Baty in 1935, and through the period covered by the testimony in this case, to-wit, July 15, 1939, and that their supervisory authority had never been changed by Baty or anyone else. Lola Skeens, produced as a witness by the Board, testified (IX 3426-3427, 3434) that she started to work for the Donnelly Company September 21, 1922, and that she worked there continuously as an instructor with the exception of the first three or four months, that she was off from work about two years following September 1, 1931. She testified (IX 3434):

"Q. Did you regard yourself as a supervisory employee? A. Yes.

Q. Why? A. Well, because I was in charge of them.

Q. Do you know whether the girls in your section regarded you as their supervisor? A. I think they did.

Q. What were your duties as an instructor? A. To plan the work and to give out work and to instruct them.

. . . . . .

Q. Did you go over the payroll cards weekly with the office? A. Yes.

Q. And you continued doing that the entire time you were an instructor prior to July 15, 1939, is that correct? A. Yes."

She further testified (IX 3435):

"Q. Was the thread girl in charge during periods when you were absent for an hour or two? A. She was.

. . . . . .

Q. Did you consult with your thread girl with respect to assignment of work? A. Yes.

Q. Did the duties of the instructor change at any time prior to July 15, 1939? A. No.

Q. Did the duties of the thread girl change at any time prior to July 15, 1939? A. No."

Etta Dorsey, produced as a witness by the Board, testified (IX 3274, 3324, 3325, 3326) that she was continuously an instructor in the employ of the Company from 1927 to July 15, 1939. She testified:

"Q. Did you regard yourself as a supervisory employee? A. Yes, I did.

Q. (IX 3325) Why? * * * A. Well, because we instructed the girls and we sort of led them right and wrong, and told them what they should do and like that.

Q. Could you state specifically what you were told by any representative of the Company as to your status as a supervisory employee? A. Yes, at one time there was a person told us that we should carry ourselves as their superior, and that they sort of held us on a pedestal, and we could just, well, shouldn't be just one of them, should be up above them, and carry ourselves that way.

Q. Who was that? A. Elizabeth Gates Reeves.

Q. Did you know whether the girls in your section regarded you as a supervisory employee? A. I think they did.

Q. Did you go over the payroll card weekly for the office prior to July 15, 1939? A. Yes, I did."

She testified (IX 3326) that the thread girls were in charge during the absence of the instructor. She testified (IX 3327-3328) that there was no change in her duties as an instructor, or of her responsibilities, from the time she went to work as an instructor in 1927, to July, 1939.

Geneva Copenhaver, produced as a witness by the Board, testified that she worked as a machine operator for the Company in 1928 and 1929 (IX 3470), when she quit for a number of years, but went back in September of 1935 and worked in the same capacity until sometime in August, 1939. She further testified (X 3481-3482, 3483) that she considered her instructor a supervisor. She testified:

> "Q. Why did you consider your instructor to be a supervisor? A. Well, the instructor—everything that we—like changing a price on a ticket or anything like that, had to be O.K.'d by the instructor. The instructor always gave us our checks or had our checks brought to the section and she would pass the checks around from girl to girl, and more than one time when I was unable to be at work, I would call, and have talked to Mrs. Dorsey myself when I was working for her. I notified her that I wouldn't be able to be at work that day. She was in full charge of the section. The girls looked to her for everything in regard to work or anything that they might be in doubt about; it was always the instructor you went to about the work.
>
> Q. Did the instructors determine whether to divide the work and lay off girls when the work was slack? A. Yes, they did."

Bessie Weilert, produced by the Board as a witness, testified that she worked for the Company as a machine operator from 1934 down through the period covered by the testimony in this case (X 3550, 3554, 3555, 3556, 3557), and that the instructors were supervisors during all of that period and that their authority as such was never lessened.

May Stevens, produced by the Board as a witness, testified that she worked for the Company as a machine operator, intermittently from 1932 down through the period covered by the testimony in this case (X 3662).

She testified (X 3673) that she considered the instructors supervisors "because they had full charge of giving out the work and who they would give it to, and of laying off the girls or saying who would be called back."

She testified (3674):

> "Q. I want to ask: Did that condition with regard to the instructors' duties continue unchanged during the entire time you were working for the Donnelly Garment Company? A. Yes."

She testified (X 3679) about a meeting of the plant union which her instructor, Frances Morrison, thought she had not attended:

> "Q. Did your instructor check up on your attendance at the meeting? A. Yes, two or three days later.
>
> Q. What did she say to you? A. She came to me and asked me if I attended the meeting, that some of the girls in the section said I was on the floor when they came back and that I hadn't attended the meeting.
>
> Q. Who was the instructor who did that? A. Frances Morrison.
>
> Q. State what effect, if any, your instructor's inquiry about your attending the meeting had upon you with reference to your feeling free to attend or not attend subsequent meetings of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union? A. Each time thereafter I went down with my instructor and always sat in the same row of seats that she did."

Frances Morrison was not introduced to refute that testimony.

From the minutes of a meeting of the group chairmen, on July 15, 1937, it appears that Hobart Atherton (X 3878; JII 927) stated:

"I think department heads, instructors, etc., should have all the privileges of membership except that they shall not be allowed the right to vote."

However, they did vote and did take active parts in the meetings during all of the time of the organization of the plant union through July 15, 1939 (X 3875-3877, III 743-763; Board's Ex. 1-0000, I 138).

Bessie Weilert testified (X 3554):

"Q. Did you ever see an instructor attend a meeting of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember whether instructors continued to attend up to July 15, 1939? A. They were still attending the meetings when I quit for that year.

Q. Did you ever complain about instructors attending meetings? A. Many times.

Q. Why? A. Because I didn't think the girls felt free to talk before their instructors and I told Rose Todd many times I didn't think that that should be permitted."

From the foregoing it is apparent that there was abundant testimony to sustain the following finding of the trial examiner, approved by the Board (X 3851, 3852, 3853, 3854):

"It is plain from all the circumstances disclosed by the Record that after June, 1935, the instructors and the thread girls continued in their capacity as supervisors in charge of the operators who work in the various sewing sections of the factory. A number of the respondent's witnesses testified that instructors do not have the power to employ, discharge or discipline operators. There is substantial evidence, however, that they do perform functions which make them part of the supervisory staff.

> The instructors, assisted by the thread girls assume complete charge of and are fully responsible for their respective sections of the factory. Among the duties of the instructor is the assignment of bundles containing the materials and supplies upon which the operators work, and the transmission to the operators of the respondent's instructions for the performance of the sewing processes * * *. In addition to these duties the instructors perform other functions as the representative of the management. When work is slack in the section instructors determine who shall take a day off and in what order the operators will be released from the section. Although Baty denied that the instructors are charged with the duty of disciplining and reporting upon the efficiency of operators who work in their respective section, the evidence is convincing that they do so the same as before the advent of Baty as factory manager, in June, 1935. The instructor constitutes the link through which the operators learn the management's directions, and the management learns whether a girl is a desirable employee, her capacity for work, her attitude toward work, and her performance of the work.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> (X 3854) On the basis of all the evidence the undersigned finds that instructors and thread girls are supervisory employees and that they act as representatives of the management in the factory.'"

We have gone into considerable detail with reference to the supervisory capacity of instructors and thread girls for the reason that they were, during all the time covered by the testimony, the immediate superiors, and supervisors of the great majority of the employees, to-wit, the machine operators, and for the reason that the evidence shows that the instructors notified the machine operators of the meetings of the Plant Union, and went to the meetings with them, and checked their attendance at said meetings; and for the further reason that the instructors were at all times very active in the conduct of the affairs of the Union (X 3875, 3877; X° 3554, 3670, 3877, III 881-882, 1003-1005). Many other supervisors, managers, representatives of the management, were active in the formation of the Plant Union, and active from its formation on through July 15, 1939, in the conduct and control of the Plant Union.

Rose Todd Represented the Company.

We believe that from what has already been stated, it is apparent that the findings of the trial examiner, approved by the Board (X 3857-3858) was abundantly established by substantial evidence.

> "Irrespective of Todd's supervisory status, the undersigned is of the view that the evidence, as a whole, clearly identifies her with the management in the minds of the employees. The undersigned finds that Rose Todd occupied a close and confidential position with the respondent and further finds that in such position she was acting for and on behalf of the respondent."

Her control of the Loyalty League as president, at the mass meeting of March 18, 1937; her participaton in the inquisition of Fern Sigler, and her orders and directions to Fern Sigler and Sylvia Hull, on April 23, 1937; her employment of attorneys; and her conduct of the organization meeting of April 27, 1937; her statement as shown by the minutes of the meeting of the Plant Union on May 11, 1937 (III 836), in answer to the question propounded by one of the members:

> "Q. If a new employee comes in are you going to set a time before they have to become a member of the Union? A. Anybody coming to work for us will join the Union immediately. If there is any doubt in their minds about whether or not they want to join our Union, then there is some doubt in their minds as to whether or not they want to work here."

The closed shop agreement did not take effect (III 809) until June 5, 1937.

Rose Todd went to St. Joseph, Missouri, on May 13, 1937, and organized the employees in the Company's branch plant in that city (III 836-837). She was asked how much time would be allowed before definitely stating whether or not they would join the union. She answered, "I think if you are interested in working for the Company you will be interested enough to join the Plant Union." The employees at St. Joseph at once unanimously agreed to join.

Rose Todd's reputation as a representative of the management spread beyond the walls of the plant. When she went to the First National Bank on April 1, 1937, and borrowed $1,000 upon the unsecured note of the Nelly Don Loyalty League, she went directly to the president of the bank who testified before the Board as follows (II 718W):

"Q. Mr. Swinney, how long you known Rose Todd prior to the time she made application for this loan? A. I would say about 10 or 12 years.

Q. Where did you meet her, Mr. Swinney? A. At my office.

Q. In what connection? A. She was a kind of 'all-around-man' for the Company.

Q. For the Donnelly Garment Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And she had come in there before on matters for the Company, had she? A. Oh, yes."

Many representatives of the Company other than Todd and the instructors and thread girls joined the plant union.

In addition to Todd, Hobart Atherton, who the examiner found to be a supervisory employee (X 3858), took a very active part in the Company's activities against the International prior to the formation of the Union, and a very active part in the formation of the Union and its operations thereafter. He, with Todd, called the meeting on March 18, 1937; he went with Todd to employ the attorneys; he was elected a member of the Group Chairmen at the organization meeting, and was very active in the meetings of the Plant Union from then on as is shown by the Plant Union minutes (IPI 821-947).

Dewey Atchison, Production Engineer, joined the union at the organization meeting, as did Heath Cowan, head of the Receiving Department, Marvin Price, in charge of maintenance of factory building and equipment, Ortense Root, head of the Sample Department, Martha Gray, head of the Outlet Store, Florence Strickland, head of the Pattern Department, Ted Scoles, in charge of the Cutting Department, Lena Tyhurst, in charge of the Inspection Department, Mary Bogart, in charge of the Dividing Department, Lulu Nichols, in charge of the Piece-work Price-fixing Department, and all of the other heads of departments, managers, supervisors, instructors and thread girls, except ten named by Rose Todd (X 3859, 3875-3878; I 135-136; X 3644-3652).

The examiner found (X 3875):

> "Under all the circumstances the undersigned concludes and finds, that the concept of an independent union originated with respondent's supervisory employees, and further, respondent, through the activities of its supervisory employees gave approval, lent assistance and encouragement to the DGWU."

And further (X 3878):

> "Inasmuch as the respondent through its supervisory employees' membership and participation in the activities of the D.G.W.U., continued its control and direction of that organization, the undersigned finds that respondent is responsible for their activities and that they were acting for and in behalf of the respondent."

The Company contributed financial support to the organization and maintenance of the plant union.

The Group Chairman met with Mrs. Reed on May 6, 1937, to discuss a contract. What happened is in part shown by the minutes of the Plant Union's Group Chairmen of that date (III 913). Rose Todd said to Mrs. Reed:

> "There is one thing we want to ask you to consider when we submit this plan to you—and that is we would like to have a closed shop."

Mrs. Reed said to Rose Todd:

> "I understand that is very essential to industrial peace."

(The closed shop was contracted for on May 27, 1937, and became effective June 5, 1937.)

> "Rose Todd: Another thing we want to submit for your consideration, is that we feel that the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union should (if it is satisfactory with you and with the Union) pay part of the General Chairman's salary, if the Company is willing to pay their part.
>
> Mrs. Reed: That is satisfactory with me.
>
> Rose Todd: Later it may be necessary for the Union to pay the General Chairman full time.

Mrs. Reed: I do not feel at the present time that you would need to give all of your time to the Union."

On May 27, 1937, the group chairmen and Mr. Tyler met with Mrs. Reed and her executives, and presented to Mrs. Reed a proposed contract (III 920). The contract, as presented, was accepted by Mrs. Reed with one material change (III 922). The minutes of the plant union's group chairman of May 27, 1937, show the following:

"A meeting of the Group Chairman with Mr. Tyler, May 27, 1937.

(After working agreement had been presented to Mrs. Reed and a few modifications made.)

Mr. Tyler: This form has been modified in three or four places. Miss Todd was here every minute of the time when these modifications were made. In my opinion it is a satisfactory form and I suggest to you and advise you to execute it."

Ms. Tyler speaking:

"Also we have added to this agreement that to become a member of this committee you must be employed here for at least one year. This is to eliminate the possibility of someone getting on this committee who is not a true representative of the employees, and who may be working here merely to act as a traitor to the Company."

The clause adopted was as follows (III 808):

"The employer recognizes the election of a committee of the Union to represent it; provided members of such committee shall have been continuously employed by the employer for the period of at least a year immediately preceding the election of such committee, and the employer agrees to further nego> tiate and deal with such committee in regard to the working conditions, wages and hours of labor of employees, and all other matters properly within the jurisdiction of such committee."

It will be recalled that at the organization meeting Mr. Tyler (III 824, 825) stated:

> "I do not think this action (the formation of the plant union) can or will be considered as any act of unfriendliness to your employer. I believe they recognize your right to take this step, and that it isn't an unfriendly act to them. In fact, it is much better for them, and for yourselves, for you to have your own union, your own representatives, rather than have a group here trying to represent outsiders from New York, and another group here representing some other outside union, etc."

The job was now complete. The plant union had been formed; the By-Laws prohibited any member from belonging to any other union; that union had been given a closed shop contract; and it was provided that no one could be on the bargaining committee who had not been in the employ of the Company for at least one year, so as to keep out anyone "who may be working here merely to act as a traitor to the Company."

The parties executed a supplementary agreement with reference to wages, hours and working conditions, on the 22nd day of June, 1937 (III 812-821), which provided, among other things, that:

> "'Methods now used by the employer determining piece-work rates, shall be continued.'"

The plant union and the Company did just that, even to the extent of making the Company's executive head of the piece-work price-fixing department, Lulu Nichols, and her assistant, Josephine Spalitto, and Rose Todd, a committee of three to represent the Union in this, the most vital and important matter about which the Company and the union had to bargain (X 3881; I 114; III 923; II 417-418, 718f; III 1007, 2009; V 1374-1375; VII 2144-2148, 2158, 2234-2293, 2400; III 1109). At the meeting of the group chairman, as shown by their minutes (III 923), Rose Todd said:

> "I would like to have a committee named to set piece work prices. As you know we have never had any trouble with the Company about piece work prices, but I feel we should have a committee to handle this for us."

(Motion made that Rose Todd, Josephine Spalitto and Lulu Nichols form this committee. Motion seconded. Unanimous.)

Ella Mae Hyde testified at the N.I.R.A. hearing, May 6, 1935 (III 1108-1109), that Lulu Nichols was on the piece work price-fixing committee for the Company, and that she was an executive.

Elizabeth Reeves, merchandising head of the Company, testified at the 1939 hearing before the Board (II 417-419), as follows:

> "Q. For many, many years Mrs. Nichols has been also on the price fixing committee of the Donnelly Garment Company? A. That is right.
>
> Q. And still is? A. That is right.
>
> Q. And has Josephine Spalito assisted her at that work, too? A. Yes, sir.
>
> Q. At fixing prices? A. Yes, sir."

The examiner found, and the Board approved (X 3887), that:

> "The completeness of the respondent's domination becomes more clear, as shown by the personnel of the DGWU committee for the adjustment of piece work rates. Two of the three of this committee are persons employed by the respondent to set piece work rates in the first instance and when one of these two, Lulu Nichols, is the respondent's authority on the finality of the rate, the result is that the respondent sits on both sides of the bargaining table and the aggrieved operators are left without any means of independent collective bargaining with regard to piece work rates, ordinarily a matter jealously guarded for the promotion of the employees."

In August or September, 1937, the Company commenced checking off dues of the employees and turning the money over to the plant union (X 3880; I 224, 226-227, 233-234, 259, 262, 274a-274b, 379; VII 2112-2113, 2387-2388). The Company required each individual employee to sign a card prepared by the Company authorizing the Company to check off the employees' dues. The money was turned over to the plant union in a lump sum and no list of employees whose dues had been checked off was furnished by the Company to the plant union. How long an employee had to work during any one month before the employee's dues would be checked off was entirely within the discretion of the Company, and was a matter about which the Union did nothing.

The Company contributed financial support to the organization and maintenance of the plant union.

The attorney who advised with Rose Todd and Hobart Atherton, supervisors, about the formation of the plant union, and who prepared the by-laws and helped negotiate the contract with the Company, was paid by the Nelly Don Loyalty League, a Company-dominated, financed and controlled organization, admittedly having in its membership everyone in the plant except Mrs. Reed and Baty.

The chairs used at the organization meeting were ordered and paid for by the Loyalty League (X 3884; III 963).

The examiner found, and the Board approved, that piece-work operators who served as group chairmen, or officers, were paid by the respondent for the time lost at work while attending to D.G.W.U. business, the time-workers being allowed to take time from work with no deductions from their pay (X 3884; IX 3427-3429, 3447-3449, 3446-3467, X 3603-3604, 3606-3609, 3618, I 127-128, 166).

Lola Skeens, for many years in the employ of the Company as an instructor, testified (IX 3427, 3429):

> "Q. Do you know Sally Ormsby? A. Yes, I do.
> Q. Did she work in your section in 1937? A. Yes.
> Q. Do you know whether she held any position in the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union? A. She was a representative for the operators.
>
> * * * * * *
>
> Q. Do you know of any occasions on which she went to Mr. Tyler's office, or attended to business of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union during working hours? A. She did go, because she would come back and give me her time and ask me to make out her time ticket.
> Q. Did you make out her time tickets? A. Yes
> Q. And was she so paid? A. Yes.
> Q. And was that true every time she left work to go to see Mr. Tyler? A. During working hours, yes.

Q. Did the time tickets show what she was doing? A. Yes, they did for a while.

Q. Did you write it on? A. I wrote on it, 'For union meeting.'

Q. Did you do that on all occasions? A. I did at first, and then Miss Todd came to me and asked me not to put that on. And I asked her what I should write, she said just to put it under 'miscellaneous' and they would understand.

Q. And did you follow Miss Todd's directions? A. Yes, I did."

Neither the Company nor the plant union produced Miss Ormby to deny that she had been so paid, nor did they produce her time tickets for that period.

Bessie Weilert gave similar testimony (X 3603-3604, 3606-3609).

Etta Dorsey gave similar testimony (IX 3329-3330).

The plant union held its meetings on the second floor of the building, which up until the 7th day of May, 1937, was not a part of the building leased by the Company. The Company did lease that floor, and the entire building, on the 10th of May, 1937, and occupied it under a lease from then on through July 15, 1939. The plant union continued to use the second floor and later the first floor for its meetings without paying any rent (X 3882; I-130-131, II 380, 381, III 877, 939, 940, 943) until April, 1938 (X 3882; II 387cc-378dd).

At a meeting of the group chairmen, November 16, 1937, as shown by their minutes (III 937-939), the question of paying rent was taken up. Rose Todd said:

"I understand the Company leased this entire building sometime back and we should ask them about paying some rent for the use of the space for our meetings.

Marjory Green: I think $2.50 or $3.00 would be sufficient. We have to furnish the chairs ourselves in addition to that, which makes it rather expensive.

Rose Todd: We will write a letter to the Company regarding this."

At a meeting of the group chairmen on December 15, 1937 (III 940-943), Rose Todd reported:

"Another thing, we have corresponded with Mr. Green (vice-president of the Company, I 354b) and he advises that $3.00 per meeting will be satisfactory rent for us to pay for the space used for our meetings, to be paid at the end of our fiscal year."

At the meeting of the plant union on May 11, 1937, the meeting following the organization meeting (III 830-835) the minutes show the following:

(835) Question: "Can we maintain our standing as a union and meet on premises maintained by the Company?"

Answer (by Rose Todd): "So far we can."

An insight into the character of the testimony given by Lee Baty is found on this rental subject. He testified (II 511) as follows:

Q. When was it that you discussed with the officials of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union about having their rent for the first floor? A. I think it was sometime in the month of May, 1937.

Q. Did you agree then it would be $3.00 a month rent? A. We did.

Q. Who did you make the agreement with? A. Rose Todd."

But the minutes of the group chairmen on November 16, 1937, above quoted, do not uphold Mr. Baty; nor do the minutes of the group chairmen of December 15. Those minutes show that it wasn't in May that the arrangement to pay rent was made, and it wasn't with Baty at all, but with Mr. Green, the vice-president, that the union made the arrangement.

The group chairmen had frequent meetings prior to May, 1938, and they were always held in the office of Mrs. Spilsbury (X 3882-3883; I 38, 151, 136, II 490, III 924, 928, VII 176, 2198, 2201, 2203-2207, IX 3233) and thereafter in the auditorium on the first floor (Company property) (X 3833; III 946). No rental was ever paid for the use of the Company property for holding group chairmen meetings.

The union maintained no office except a Company desk used by Rose Todd on the ninth floor of the Company's plant, to which place she requested that any member of the plant union come to consult with her about any matter of plant union interest (X 3884-3885; I 133, III 830, 831, 833, 835, 869-870). The only furniture, except the desk used by the plant union, was a filing cabinet belonging to the Company (X 3884; I 35-36).

Rose Todd used the Company's intercommunicating telephone system to call meetings through the aid of instructors of each section; used the Company's typewriter and mimeograph machine, and any other facilities and property of the Company which she found necessary to carry on the affairs of the union (X 3883; I 128a-129, II 387ge, 704g, V 1364e, 1374d, VIII 2897, IX 3152-3153, 3276, 3397-3399, 3434, X 3558, VIII 2621-2622, IX 3342, X 3672).

The examiner found, and the Board approved (X 3888):

> "On all the evidence the undersigned finds the respondent dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the D.G.W.U. and contributed support thereto, and that the respondent thereby interfered with, restrained and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act."

Company and plant union evidence as to why the employees joined the plant union.

The Company and the plant union attempted throughout the hearing to show that the employees joined the plant union of their own free will and accord, and because they were fearful of physical violence, which the Company and the plant union insisted the International had threatened. They produced eleven witnesses in 1942 who so testified (VIII 2564-3000, IX 3002-3249).

The Board produced witnesses who testified that they had joined the union to hold their jobs with the Company, and not because of any fear of physical violence from the International, and not of their own free will and accord.

Lola Skeens testified (IX 3455):

> "Q. Were the employees talking about means to protect themselves against any attacks that would be made by the ILGWU? A. Well, I didn't hear that."

And again (IX 3456):

> "Q. Well, did you personally have any fear about being able to get in and out of the building without getting hurt? A. Oh, no, I never thought that."

Geneva Copenhaver testified (X 3532-3533) as follows:

"Q. You stated already that the violence and the newspaper articles and talk of violence had nothing whatever to do with your joining the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know any person who did join on that account? A. Because of the—

Q. (Interrupting) Violence and the newspaper articles and everything of that sort? A. No, I don't.

* * * * * * *

Q. (Continuing) Because of the violence and newspaper articles shown you, or any fear or threats of violence? A. You mean, is that why I joined?

Q. No. A. Why anyone else joined?

Q. Do you know of anyone else who joined on that account? A. Because they were afraid of that violence?

Q. Yes, do you know of anybody, any single human being? A. No, I don't know of anybody that joined because of that."

The same witness testified (X 3497):

"Q. Why did you sign the card? (The union membership card.) A. Well, I felt like I'd better, if I wanted my job. That was the impression I got from it. I needed my job and I needed it badly, and I got the impression that if I didn't, I wouldn't have a job very long."

She further testified (X 3498):

"Q. Did you join the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union of your own free will? A. Well, I joined it of my own free will to the extent of this: I was never threatened or told if I didn't join the Union I would be fired, or anything of the kind, by the Company or anybody who had any authority down there. But it was just clear in my own mind if I didn't belong to the Union I wouldn't have a job there very long, and I still feel that way about it."

(X 3504):

"Q. Was there a general discussion among the employees at the Donnelly plant of the violence going on in those strikes? A. Oh, you heard some girls talking about it.

Q. But there wasn't much talk? A. Oh, it was discussed quite a bit, naturally.

Q. Were you of the opinion that there was going to be any violence at the Donnelly plant? A. I never had the slightest bit of fear in going in and out of the Donnelly plant—going back and forth to work, of being bothered by the union in any way. I was never approached—I drove my car back and forth every day and parked it there and I never saw anything in front of the Donnelly plant that might bother us."

Mrs. Copenhaver was cross-examined by counsel for the Company and plant union about an affidavit which she had signed to the effect that she had joined the plant union of her own free will and accord. She testified (X 3519):

"Q. Did you think you understood what that statement was that you were signing? A. I thought I did.

Q. As a matter of fact, when you sign your name, you think you understand what you are signing your name to, don't you? A. I wouldn't say I thoroughly understood everything I signed down at Donnelly's.

Q. Don't you think at the time you sign your name to something you understand what you are signing? A. I think I should. I know now that I should. But at that time we signed so many things down there, you would sign them hurriedly and you didn't have time to stop and read those things thoroughly and absorb them like you should. * * * I signed my name and didn't think much about it."

Again she testified with reference to signing said affidavit (X 3525):

"A. I don't know as it was my choice. I was told that it was down there to be signed and I knew I was expected to sign it."

She testified further (X 3536-3537):

"Q. Now, do you have any recollection at all as to where you signed this Board's 1-RRRR? (III 764.) A. You mean the one where we swore to it?

Q. No, I mean the other one. A. I don't remember a whole lot about that one.

Q. Was it somewhere in the plant? * * * (3537) A. It was on the premises. I never signed one that was away from the building. Everyone I ever signed was right there in the building, some place in the building.

Q. Were you ever shown any document down there to sign that you didn't sign? A. No.

Q. You signed them all? A. Every one that I was presented with."

Bessie Weilert (X 3594-3597), on being handed an affidavit (Intervener's No. 20, VI 1713) and asked if she signed it, by counsel for the Company, stated that she did.

"Q. I hand you the affidavit and ask you to state what was not true. A. Well, I didn't consider that 'wish' and 'choice' correct. It wasn't our wish and our choice, it was just a matter of duty. I felt it was our duty to belong to that union if that was what they wanted us to do. I can't really say it was my wish and choice, but that it was necessary" (X 3596).

"Q. What was the next item that was untrue at the time you swore to it? * * * A. Where it says: 'We understand that there is in some quarters a disposition to question the fact that membership in our own union is our own voluntary choice, therefore, for the purpose of establishing that fact to the satisfaction of the Labor Board, the public, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, and any and all others who may be interested'."

May Stevens testified (X 3676):

"Q. Mrs. Stevens, I want to go to the subject of the reason for the formation of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union. Did fear have anything to do with that? A. Not to me, it didn't."

And again (X 3683):

"Q. You say, do you, that fear, personal fear of personal violence to you, played no part at all in your choice to belong to the Donnelly Garment Workers Union, and help organize it? A. Absolutely not."

And again at (X 3691) on cross-examination by Mr. Tyler:

"Q. When you stated this morning that you went along with the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, at the beginning because you thought it would mean your job, did you mean that you believed that at that time you would be discharged if you had not joined? A. Yes, that is what I believed.

Q. What did you base that belief on? A. The Fern Sigler incident.

Q. Did you believe that the overwhelming majority of the employees wanted this Union and would get a closed shop contract, and for that reason you would have to join or lose your job?

A. No, not in that sense of the word, about the overwhelming majority. It was because that we went in that meeting unprepared, and they just as much as forced us to join it.

Q. What do you mean by 'just as much as forced you to join it'? A. We were handed cards and they told them to count them and see that every card was accounted for and handed back.

Q. And the fact that cards were accounted for, in your mind, means that you were forced to join? A. Yes.

Q. Weren't you told in that meeting that you were to do as you pleased, and nobody was to sign a card that didn't want to, or if anybody wanted to think it over, he was to keep it? A. Perhaps so, but we knew differently.

Mrs. Stevens was shown Interviewer's Exhibit No. 20 (VI 1741), which she had signed and which stated that it was the free wish and choice of those signing the Exhibit to belong to the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union. She testified with reference thereto as follows (X 3692):

"Q. Was that statement true or false when you signed it? A. It was false, because it wasn't my free wish to join it or what I chose to do of my free will."

At (X 3690) Mrs. May Stevens testified with reference to the Board's Exhibit 1-RRRR (III 764), which she had signed, by Mr. Tyler:

"Q. I will ask you to note the last paragraph which says: 'The undersigned state that they are members of the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union and joined said union and have at all times since remained members thereof, solely of their own free will, choice and preference, that they have not been influenced by any threats, coercion or pressure of their employer or any representative of said employer, and that they have no knowledge of any incidents in which the employer or any representative of the employer has exerted pressure, intimidation, coercion or any other influence upon the undersigned or any other employees to join the Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, or to stay out of any other labor union.' Was that true or false at the time you made it? A. It was false.

Q. At the time you made it it was false, is that your answer? A. As to my state of mind about it."

The examiner found (X 3885):

"From the foregoing facts, conclusions, and findings, it is clear that, notwithstanding the contenton of the respondent and the DGWU that the DGWU's formation was the result of the employees' own choice of a collective bargaining representative, the respondent has not permitted the employees to freely exercise that right of self-organization free from employer influence and domination."

The Board found (A 618-619):

"In remanding the case to the Board for further hearing, the Circuit Court directed that the respondent and the DGWU be permitted to adduce the previously proffered testimony of respondent's employees to show, in substance, that they formed and joined the DGWU of their own free will and that they were not influenced, interfered with, or coerced by the respondent in choosing that organization as their bargaining representative * * * We have carefully considered all such evidence adduced by the respondent and the DGWU. We find, however, that the testimony in question does not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the respondent permitted acts of interference and assistance in the formation and administraton of the DGWU, which subjected that organization to the respondent's domination and which removed from the employees' selection of the DGWU the complete freedom of choice which the Act contemplates."

SUMMARY, WITH PAGE CITATION, OF ARGUMENT.

The argument is in seven divisions, under numerical points.

Point One (Page 71).

There is substantial evidence to support the findings and order of the Board. There are three summaries of such evidence: (1) statements of evidence in this brief; (2) summary of evidence by counsel in case No. 786; and, (3) summaries by Judge Sanborn (151 Fed. (2d) 855 to 869) and by Judge Woodrough (151 Fed. (2d) 879). It being established that there is substantial evidence to support the findings, the court may not weigh, but must wholly disregard conflicting evidence no matter how convincing to the court such evidence otherwise might be. Into that field the court may not go, all the way in, or at all. Cases and authorities are cited.

Point Two (Page 75).

Even if rejection of the given evidence by the examiner were a judicial error, it is not a denial of due process. The sole ground upon which the Court of Appeals set aside the Board's order was denial of due process. We take issue, there was no denial of due process. Fundamental principles of due process, as applied to judicial proceedings, and what constitutes a denial thereof, together with supporting authorities, are stated. Judicial error is not denial of due process. Due process does not guarantee against judicial error.

The court, in determining whether an order by an administrative board constitutes a denial of due process, is guided and restricted by the same canons of constitutional law that are applicable to a determination of the constitutionality of a direct legislative act. The task of holding that either a statute or an order by an administrative board is unconstitutional because a denial of due process is a delicate one and every presumption and intendment is to be indulged in favor of validity. Before rejection of evidence can be a denial of due process, its exclusion must transcend mere judicial error. The rejected evidence must be so direct and vital, so essential to the party's case, that without it there is no real trial. The ruling must not only be wrong, but so manifestly wrong that it is arbitrary.

The rejected evidence in this case is not of that character.

Point Three (Page 84).

So far from the rejection of the evidence in question being a denial of due process, such rejection would not have been reversible error in an ordinary jury trial. The rejected evidence is classified and it is argued that none thereof was admissible in any event because the receipt of such proferred evidence would lead to the trial of collateral issues, detract the mind of the trier of fact from the real issues and unduly prolong the trial. There is a well-known exception to the general rule that all relevant evidence must be received, which is, that the same may and should be rejected by a trial judge when its admission will have a tendency to divert the attention of the jury from the precise issues involved in the case, and protract the trial beyond reasonable limits. This rule is called the Doctrine of Collateral Inconvenience, by Dr. Greenleaf.

Point Four (Page 90).

The examiner did receive, and both the examiner and the Board did consider and weigh the employees' testimony, as ordered by the Court of Appeals.

By the ruling of Judges Sanborn and Riddick the order was set aside because the majority of the court held that while such evidence was received, the Board did not give the weight thereto which the court believed it was entitled to have.

Quotations from the record conclusively show not only that such evidence was received, but that it was considered and weighed.

Point Five (Page 94).

The Court of Appeals, in direct violation of the provisions of the Act, did itself weigh conflicting evidence. The Court of Appeals set its own opinion of the value and weight of given evidence against the opinion of the Board, and because of its opinion of the value of such testimony, the court did set aside the order of the Board.

Point Six (Page 95).

A careful reading of the opinions and consideration of the entire record demonstrate that the Court of Appeals has treated its jurisdiction to review findings and orders of administrative boards as coextensive with, similar and analogous to, its judicial authority in legal proceedings as upon appeal from court to court. The jurisdiction of a court to review and otherwise deal with judicial proceedings, either in the trial court or on appeal, is contrasted with the statutory and constitutional jurisdiction of the court in review of an administrative order. The court in this case went clearly beyond either statutory or constitutional jurisdiction of the court to review administrative orders and did exercise jurisdiction which it did not have in that field, but which it had only in the field of appeal from court to court. The principles of public administrative law here involved are set forth.

Point Seven (Page 98).

Failure of the Board to designate a trial examiner for the second hearing, other than the one who conducted the first hearing, did not justify the court of appeals in setting aside the order.

ARGUMENT

Point One.

There is substantial evidence in the Record to support the findings and order of the Board.

The evidence supporting the findings is summarized with appropriate references to the record in the division of this brief entitled Statement of Evidence Supporting the Board's Finding. Such evidence is likewise summarized in the brief of petitioner in No. 786. A part, but not all, of such supporting evidence is summarized in the opinion of Judge Sanborn (151 Fed. (2d) 855 to 869), and likewise in the opinion of Judge Woodrough, and particularly at page 879 wherein he states: "My study of the record herein has satisfied me that the findings of the Board herein are sustained by substantial evidence." While in our judgment it is finally for this Court to determine de novo from the record whether there is such substantial evidence, yet the recital by Judge Sanborn, fortified and sustained by Judge Woodrough, is relevant and persuasive.

In scrutinizing the record for evidence supporting the finding, we are not concerned with, but disregard, conflicting evidence; "The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive." (USCA, Title 29, Section 160 (e) and cases hereinafter cited.)

These summaries of favorable evidence (brief of petitioner in 786, this brief and the recitals of such evidence by Judges Sanborn and Woodrough) verified by the record, present a clear picture of unfair labor practice in violation of Sections 7, 8 (2) and other provisions of the Act. Such evidence shows that the Company dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the plant union and contributed support thereto, thus interfering with and restraining and coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act; that the closed shop agreement with the plant union was an integral part of the Company's plan to discourage and prevent membership of its employees in the International; that the Company dominated and interfered with the administration of the plant union and contributed financial and other support thereto; that the Company discouraged membership in the International Union by laying off employees and discriminating in regard to their hire and tenure of employment; that the Company dominated, controlled and used the plant union to interfere with, restrain and coerce its employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act; that the Company, because of hostility to the International, influenced and coerced its employees into forming a plant union, depriving the employees of their freedom of action and choice and making them, in effect, servants dominated by their employer.

Manifestly such evidence, together with all reasonable inferences that the Board was entitled to draw therefrom, supports the finding and order of the Board of the existence of unfair labor practice.

The court may not weigh the evidence.

Once it is established that there is evidence supporting the finding, the court cannot weigh, but must wholly disregard, conflicting evidence no matter how convincing it may seem. Into that field the court may not go, all the way in, or at all. Thus the law is written, USCA, Title 29, Section 160 (e) (f):

"Our most limited power of review has been made crystal clear. National Labor Relations Board v. Waterman Steamship Corp., 309 U. S. 206, 208, 209, 226, 60 S. Ct. 493, 84 L. Ed. 704; National Labor Relations Board v. Bradford Dyeing Ass'n, 310 U. S. 318, 342, 343, 60 S. Ct. 918, 84 L. Ed. 1226." National Labor Relations Board v. Milan Shirt Mfg. Co., 125 Fed. (2d) 376.

"As we stated in National Labor Relations Board v. Waterman Steamship Corp., supra, 309 U. S. at pages 208, 209, 60 S. Ct. at pages 495, 496, 84 L. Ed. 704; '* * *' Congress has left questions of law which arise before the Board—but not more—ultimately to the traditional review of the judiciary. Not by accident, but in line with a general policy, Congress has deemed it wise to entrust the finding of facts to these specialized agencies. It is essential that courts regard this division of responsibility which Congress as a matter of policy has embodied in the very statute from which the Court of Appeals derived its jurisdiction to act.' Congress entrusted the Board, not the courts, with the power to draw inferences from the facts. National Labor Relations Board v. Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., 303 U. S. 261, 271, 58 S. Ct. 571, 576, 82 L. Ed. 831, 115 A. L. R. 307; National Labor Relations Board v. Falk Corp., 308 U. S. 453, 461, 60 S. Ct. 307, 311, 84 L. Ed. 396. The Board, like other expert agencies dealing with specialized fields (see Rochester Tel. Corp. v. United States, 307 U. S. 125, 146, 59 S. Ct. 754, 764, 83 L. Ed. 1147; Swayne & Hoyt Ltd. v. United States, 300 U. S. 297, 304, 57 S. Ct. 478, 481, 81 L. Ed. 659) has the function of appraising conflicting and circumstantial evidence, and the weight and credibility of testimony." National Labor Relations Board v. Link-Belt Co., 61 S. Ct. [illegible], c. 365, 311 U. S. 584.

Precedents can be multiplied; none modifies nor restricts the foregoing. A few illustrative applications follow:

An inference (contrasted with direct evidence) of fact by the Board, "may not be set aside upon judicial review because the courts would have drawn a different inference." (NLRB v. Southern Company, 319 U. S. 50, 63 S. Ct. l. c. 910.) Inferences drawn by the Board "from evidentiary facts are fact questions to be determined by the Board and a finding of inferential facts made by the Board will not be disturbed by the court, if warranted from the evidence, even though it permits of conflicting inferences." Swift v. NLRB, 106 Fed. (2d) l. c. 93 (10 CCA). If the evidence picture permits conflicting inferences the order may not be set aside, "inferences to be drawn are for the Board and not the courts." Montgomery Ward v. NLRB, 107 Fed. (2d) l. c. 560 (7 CCA). See also NLRB v. Pennsylvania Lines, 303 U. S. 261, 271, 58 S. Ct. 571; Wilson & Company v. NLRB, 124 Fed. (2d) 845, l. c. 847 (7 CCA).

A Board finding based upon hearsay testimony may not for that reason be set aside where it is the kind of evidence "on which reasonable men are accustomed to rely in serious affairs," for "it is only convincing, not lawyers' evidence, which is required, evidence such as a reasonable mind might accept, though other like minds might not do so." NLRB v. Remington-Rand, 130 Fed. (2d) l. c. 930. See also International Lodge v. NLRB, 110 Fed. (2d) 29, affirmed 311 U. S. 72, 61 S. Ct. 83; Consolidated v. NLRB, 305 U. S. 197, 59 S. Ct. 206, l. c. 217.

The Board may reasonably choose the criteria determinative of an issue of fact and reject evidence which has no materiality in view of the criteria adopted; such rejection is not a denial of due process. 143 Fed. (2d) 488

(8 CCA). See also FPC v. Natural Gas Company, 315 U. S. 575, 586, 62 S. Ct. 736, 743.

It is our submission under this Point One that, viewed in light of the foregoing principles of law and the application thereof in specific illustrations, there was sufficient credible evidence to support the finding and order of the Board. In fact, there was more than sufficient, there was an abundance of such evidence.

The Board acted within its recognized and approved authority in ordering the Company to reimburse all of its employees for all dues and assessments which it had deducted from their wages on behalf of the plant union. (Vol. A. 622.)

The existence in the Board of such authority has been precisely and clearly approved by the Supreme Court in the case of Virginia Power Company v. NLRB, 319 U. S. 533, 539, 545, 63 S. Ct. 1214.

POINT TWO.

Even if rejection of the given evidence by the examiner were judicial error, it is not denial of due process.

The sole ground on which the Court of Appeals set aside the Board's order was want of due process. The decree of the Court of Appeals is as follows:

> "On consideration whereof, it is now here ordered, adjudged, and decreed by this Court, that the prayer of the National Labor Relations Board for a decree of this Court enforcing the order under review is hereby denied for want of due process in the proceedings upon which the order is based, and said order is hereby set aside." (Court of Appeals decree, October 29, 1945.) (Vol. XIII, R. 4376.)

We take issue. There was no denial of due process. This involves consideration of the fundamental principles of due process and what constitutes a denial thereof.

Due process of law as applied to judicial proceedings.

The term "due process of law," or its equivalent, is not defined in the Constitution. Courts have been reluctant to define the term in its broadest application, being rather disposed to ascertain its intent and application by gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, 12 C. J. 1188, and a multitude of decisions of which Murray v. Hoboken Land Company, 18 Howard 272, 277, is typical. This, however, is true only in its broadest application of the term. It is not true as applied to judicial proceedings. In that field specific definitions and applications have been by the courts repeatedly made. Whatever difficulty the courts have experienced in giving the term a specific definition as applied to every permissible exertion of government power, the courts have declared, and it is the settled law, that there can be no doubt of the meaning of due process of law when applied to judicial proceedings.

When the term is applied to judicial proceedings, it means a proceeding which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon notice and upon inquiry and wherein judgment is rendered only after trial. (16 C. J. S. 1143; 12 C. J. 1192); Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 733; Southern Bell Telephone Co. v. Louisiana Comm., 195 La. 729, 17 So. 548.

> Whatever difficulty may be experienced in giving to the term "due process of law" a definition which will embrace every permissible exertion of power affecting private rights, and excludes such as is forbidden; it has been said that there can be no doubt of its meaning when applied to judicial proceedings, and as so applied due process of law has been variously held to mean a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds on inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. 16 C. J. S. 1143; Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113, 124, 83 Am. D. 728; Huber v. Reily, 53 Penn. 112.

The definition in Webster's argument in the Dartmouth College case, 4 Wheaton 518, 581, is classical: "By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law; a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial."

> "The words 'due process of law' were undoubtedly intended to convey the same meaning as the words 'by the law of the land' in Magna Charta. Lord Coke, in his commentary on these words (2 Inst. 50), says they mean due process of law. The constitutions which have been adopted in the several states before the formation of the federal constitution, following the language of the great charter more closely, generally contained the words 'but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.'" Murray v. Hoboken, 18 Howard (59 U. S.) 272, l. c. 276.

The Murray case, like many preceding and subsequent decisions, holds that the term "law of the land" means precisely what Webster defined it to mean; the very substance of which is, a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry after notice, and renders judgment after trial.

Any judicial proceeding that measures up to the requirements of the Webster definition, affords the parties due process, no matter what procedural errors or erroneous reasoning leading to injustice in the given case may be asserted. Such alleged errors may be presented only on new trial or on appeal from court to court. They cannot successfully be asserted as a denial of due process.

The definition of due process is exact and clearly expressed, but likewise are its limitations. Webster's definition was not new. He clearly saw and clearly defined three (and only three) prerequisites to due process, which were, (1) a hearing before condemnation, which of course involves notice, (2) judicial inquiry, and (3) judgment only after trial. Precisely the same thing had been said as far back as Coke's Institutes, which pronounced essential elements of law of the land as "actor, reus, judex" —some form of complaint by actor (plaintiff); opportunity to answer on hearing by reus (defendant), and a trial before a judge (judex), according to the essentials of some judicial proceeding. Murray v. Hoboken, 18 Howard 272, l. c. 280.

Due process does not guarantee against judicial error.

Where the parties have been heard in regular course of judicial proceeding, affording the essentials of due process as clearly defined, no error of the court in procedure or in decision is a denial of due process.

Attempts to review decisions on the ground of denial of due process by unsuccessful litigants, have been characterized as the last resort in desperate cases.

> "So numerous, so varied, and in many cases so trifling have been the questions raised as to the protection afforded by the guaranty of due process of law, that objections founded on it have been judicially characterized as 'those last resorts of desperate cases.'" 16 C. J. S. 1150; see also Commonwealth v. Philadelphia Coal Co., 145 Pa. 283, 286, 23 Atl. 809, 12 C. J. 1195, Note 85; Mabee v. McDonald, (Tex.) 175 S. W. 676.

"The due process clause has been much abused and stretched to limits never designed by the constitution makers." Miami County v. Dayton, 92 Ohio State 215, 115, 110 N. E. 276.

"There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision (the due process provision) as found in the fourteenth amendment. In fact, it would seem, from the character of many of the cases before us, and the arguments made in them, that the clause under consideration is looked upon as a means of bringing to the test of the decisions of this court the abstract opinions of every unsuccessful litigant in a state court, of the justice of the decision against him, and of the merits of the litigation on which such a decision may be founded." Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, l. c. 104.

Judicial error is not denial of due process.

Where taxing boards of two states were proceeding to tax the same property, complainant filed a bill in the nature of interpleader. Against the claim of due process, the court said:

"In reaching the conclusion they (the respective taxing boards) did on the evidence, one or the other may have erred in judgment, but such error would not be a lack of due process or in violation of the equal protection clause. It has been settled that that amendment does not assure immunity from judicial error or uniformity of judicial decisions. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co. v. Wisconsin, 252 U. S. 100, 106, 40 S. Ct. 306, 309, 64 L. Ed. 476, 10 A. L. R. 892; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 S. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91; Tracy v. Ginzberg, 205 U. S. 170, 27 S. Ct. 461, 51 L. Ed. 755." Riley v. Worcester County Trust Co., 89 Fed. (2d) l. c. 66.

"But, however that may be, the Fourteenth Amendment does not, in guaranteeing equal protection of the laws, assure uniformity of judicial decisions (Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 569, 18 Sup. Ct. 445, 42 L. Ed. 853), any more than in guaranteeing due process it assures immunity from judicial error (Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91; Tracy v. Ginzberg, 205 U. S. 170, 27 Sup. Ct. 461, 51 L. Ed. 755)." Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co. v. State of Wisconsin, 40 Sup. Ct. l. c. 309, 252 U. S. 100.

"When the parties have been fully heard in the regular course of judicial proceedings, an erroneous decision of a state court does not deprive the unsuccessful party of his property without due process of law, within the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90; Head v. Amoskeag Co., 113 U. S. 9, 26, 5 Sup. Ct. 411; Morley v. Railway Co., 146 U. S. 162, 171, 13 Sup. Ct. 54; Bergemann v. Backer, 157 U. S. 655, 15 Sup. Ct. 727." Central Land Co. of West Virginia v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. l. c. 83.

"The plaintiff also insists that by the judgment of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts he has been deprived of his property without the due process of law guaranteed by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. This proposition is without merit. Within the meaning of that amendment, the court, by its judgment, did not deprive the plaintiff of property without due process of law. He sought a decree adjudging that he was entitled to the money received by Ginzberg from O'Hearn. The court, proceeding entirely upon principles of general and local law, and giving all parties interested in the question an opportunity to be heard, decided that plaintiff had no right to that money. The decision of a state court, involving nothing more than the ownership of property, with all parties in interest before it, cannot be regarded by the unsuccessful party as a deprivation of property without due process of law, simply because its effect is to deny his claim to own such property. If we were of opinion, upon this record, that the money received by Ginzberg from O'Hearn really belonged to Tracy—upon which question we express no opinion—still it could not be affirmed that the latter had, within the meaning of the Constitution, and by reason of the judgment below, been deprived of his property without due process of law. Under the opposite view every judgment of a state court involving merely the ownership of property could be brought here for review—a result not to be thought of." Tracy v. Ginzberg, 159 U. S. 103, 27 Sup. Ct. 1, c. 463.

The law could not be otherwise. A contention that a given trial is not a fair trial because it denies due process is necessarily an attempt to raise a constitutional question. If procedural error in the rejection of competent evidence is a denial of due process, then every case wherein there was rejection of such evidence would ultimately be for decision by the Supreme Court. If a Court of Appeals is to reverse the findings and order of the Board by reason of procedural errors in the receipt of evidence merely by stating that such rejection is a denial of due process of law, then all distinction, at least as far as the receipt of evidence is concerned, between the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals under the Act on the one hand, and jurisdiction of such in legal proceedings in an appeal from court to court in a proceeding at law on the other, is destroyed. Such ruling is necessarily in conflict with National Labor Relations Board v. Bradford Dyeing Association, 310 U. S. 318, 60 S. Ct. 918, and particularly in conflict with Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 308 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437, and Fly v. Heitmeyer, 309 U. S. 146, 60 S. Ct. 443.

Again for the Court of Appeals so to do is for the court to exercise jurisdiction far beyond that fixed by the Act of Congress, and far beyond any inherent jurisdiction bottomed upon the due process clause. This is so because rejection of evidence, at least of the character here involved, is at most judicial error and not denial of due process (cases supra).

The court in determining whether an order by an administrative board constitutes a denial of due process, is guided and restricted by the same canons of constitutional law applicable to determination of the constitutionality of a direct legislative Act.

The order of an administrative board, created by valid law, is inherently legislative and the validity of the order as to its constitutionality is to be tested and tried, precisely the same as if it were a specific legislative act. For instance, the legislature has power to regulate rates of common carriers and it may do so by as direct a statute as one providing that passenger rates shall be 3c a mile. Such statute is subject to the test of constitutionality against the claim that it is confiscatory and denial of due process.

For reasons well understood and learnedly discussed in the Pottsville case (308 U. S. 134), direct legislative regulatory acts become increasingly impractical, if not impossible. Hence legislative boards were born. These acts have successfully withstood persistent and skillful attack upon their constitutionality. Such laws have been sustained upon the theory that the act of the board is in itself, under a valid law, the act of the legislature. Instead of enacting that passenger rates shall be 3c per mile, the legislature provides that passenger rates shall be reasonable, in accordance with certain fundamental principles and standards contained in the legislative act. Then the administrative board, acting in strict compliance with the standards fixed by the legislature, makes an order to fit the facts within a given case. When such board, in proper proceedings and hearing, makes an order that within a given territory passenger rates shall be 3c a mile, the situation is precisely as if the legislature itself had directed such rate. (See authorities hereinafter cited.)

Such administrative order is subject to the same constitutional test under the same canons guiding and restricting the courts in determining the constitutionality of the direct legislative act providing the passenger rate. Some of these canons here controlling are as follows:

While undoubtedly a court has judicial authority, in a given case, to declare a legislative act or administrative order unconstitutional and hence void, yet the task is "a delicate one and only to be entered upon with reluctance and hesitation." Every presumption and intendment is to be indulged in favor of validity. The burden is upon him who attacks the law or order. The invalidity must be clear and certain. Unless the act is clearly unconstitutional, it will be held valid.

> "It is our duty, when required in the regular course of judicial proceedings, to declare an act of Congress void if not within the legislative power of the United States; but this declaration should never be made except in a clear case. Every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt. One branch of the government cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule." Union Pacific Railroad Co. v. United States, 99 U. S. 700 (Sinking-Fund Cases).

1 Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th edition, page 334; Champion v. Anes, 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492, 23 S. Ct. 34; Jackson v. Bowden, 67 Fla. 184, 64 So. 769, L. R. A. 1916D, 931. Any reasonable doubt as to the validity of the act is to be resolved in favor of its validity. Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. Ed. 606. It is not sufficient that there be judicial doubt of validity. 1 Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th edition, page 371; Wellington Petitioners, 16 Pick. 86, opinion by Shaw, Ch. J.; Heisler v. Thomas, 260 U. S. 245, 43 S. Ct. 83.

Under the principles variously exemplified in the foregoing authorities, before rejection of evidence can be denial of due process its exclusion must transcend mere judicial error. The rejected evidence must be so direct and vital, so essential to the party's case that without it there was no real trial. The ruling must not only be wrong, but so manifestly wrong that it is arbitrary. If the question of admission is at all debatable, its rejection cannot be denial of due process.

We submit that the rejected evidence in this case is not of that character.

Point Three.

So far from the rejection of the evidence being a denial of due process, such rejection would not have been reversible error in an ordinary jury trial.

In the first place, since all rulings rejecting evidence in the first hearing were assigned as error in the first case before the Court of Appeals, the examiner was warranted, in the second hearing, in assuming: (a) that his rulings with respect to the rejection of evidence, except where condemned, or at least mentioned in the court's opinion, were not erroneous and should be by him followed; (b) that certainly his rejection, in the first hearing, of evidence of alleged illegal conduct of the International (which rejection was expressly approved by the court) (123 Fed. (2d) l. c. 225 (15)) was to be adhered to; (c) that he was not required to hear any new or additional evidence not within the scope of the remand.

These considerations alone dispose of nearly all complaint concerning rejection of evidence.

Moreover, the rejection of the evidence in question did not constitute reversible error.

Contracts between the International and other employers said to contain terms less favorable to the employees than the contract between the company and the plant union.

Such testimony was non-receivable because it would lead to endless collateral issues, a practice condemned by all trial courts. Who is to say one long complicated contract is more favorable to one party than another contract of like character between other parties? If one side introduces certain terms claimed to be more favorable, the other would introduce other terms and conditions dehors the contract said to counterbalance. The court would be deserting and laying aside the main issue to try endless collateral matters.

Aside from this, the only conceivable probative value of such evidence would be that it could be argued therefrom that the company employees formed the plant union because they believed it could obtain a more favorable contract than could the International. But, even here, the existence of such contracts could not bear upon the motive of the employee in joining the plant union unless the employee knew thereof, and then it would not be what was in the International contracts, but what the employee believed was in them. That is precisely the ruling of the trial examiner. He excluded the terms of the collateral contracts, but admitted evidence from the employees as to what they believed were in such contracts and whether they joined the plant union because of what they so believed. Such ruling of the examiner's runs through pages of the record. We refer to Volume VII, 2514 and following, and Volume VIII, 2521, and following. For instance, note the following:

> "Trial Examiner Batten: I think it is important also to know what information they (the employees) had. I say 'what information they had,' not what information was available in somebody's office, Mr. Tyler. What information did these people have upon which they acted?" Vol. VII, 2514.
>
> "* * * we should take the testimony of these employees as to what they thought, what motivated them in doing the things they did. I agree with you on that. * * * In other words, it does seem to me that that is the primary purpose for which the court sent it back, to take the testimony of these people, what they thought, why they did these things." Vol. VII, 2518.

The trial examiner did receive testimony of the employees as to what they understood and had heard with respect to such contracts and other activities of the International and what effect such information had upon their joining the company union. Volume VII, 2593, 2594, 2929, 2931; Volume IX, 3080.

Testimony with respect to alleged illegal conduct, fraud and violence on the part of the International.

This evidence was excluded at the first hearing and its exclusion was expressly approved by the Court of Appeals in the first case, 123 Fed. (2d) l. c. 215, 225

(15)). Such testimony was non-receivable because it necessarily led to the trial of collateral issues. Moreover, in the second hearing the examiner did admit testimony on this subject for the only purpose for which it could possibly be relevant, and that was a bearing upon the motive of the employees in joining the plant union. Here again actual violence, fraud and other misconduct was not admissible per se, but what the employees had experienced, seen or heard and believed was admitted, regardless of whether such information was true or false. (VII, 2566-2568, 2624-2626-2711-2713, 2768-2771, 2788, 2848-2851, 2915-2917, 3003-3006, 3046-3049, 3078-3081, 3120-3121, 3169-3171, 4101-4102, 5125-4169, 4173-4175.)

Evidence that the International, under other contracts with other employers, received as eligible members employees allegedly having duties similar to those employees said to be supervisory employees at the Donnelly plant.

There was testimony that certain employees of the Company were supervisory employees, so that their statements and conduct would be binding upon the Company. The Company claimed these were not supervisory employees, and for the purpose of showing that they were not, the Company offered to prove that similar employees in other plants under contracts with the International, were admitted to membership, when they could not have been admitted if they were supervisory employees. Manifestly this was remote and collateral, leading, if it was received, to interminable comparison and inquiry concerning various kinds of employees in other plants; whether the conditions were similar in the various plants, or whether and wherein they differed, and so forth and so on. The rulings of the examiner are found in Volume

VII, 2508-2510; Volume VIII, 2559-2564-2788-2789; Volume IX, 3527; Volume X, 3787-3794.

In addition to this evidence leading to the trial of collateral issues, such evidence was inadmissible because what the International did with respect to other employers and employees could not possibly have material weight with the Board in determining the primary issue of the presence or absence of unfair labor practice by this Company. Respondents treat this case as if it were a suit at law between the International and the Company, wherein the acts and conduct and declarations of the International would be permissible because admissions against interest.

The case of NLRB v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Company, 318 U. S. 9, 63 S. Ct. 394, is not in point. The question in that case was the propriety of an order of remand to take additional evidence. It in nowise involved the power of the court to set aside the order of the Board, either statutory or because of denial of due process. The facts in the two cases are so divergent that neither case could stand as a precedent in the other.

In the Indiana case the excluded evidence which the court directed should be admitted, disclosed dynamiting and other violence, threats and intimidations resulting in witnesses refusing to testify or committing perjury, and conduct calculated and intended to influence witnesses, the examiner and the Board. Nothing of that sort is disclosed in this record. The controlling consideration was the effect upon the proceeding itself. The case did not hold that evidence of misconduct in labor matters of a union, even where a party to the proceeding, was admissible. It held exactly to the contrary. The evidence was admissible only upon the narrow ground that it bore upon the discretion of the Board, not in the trial, but in issuing a complaint.

The marked distinction between the Indiana case and this case and the total absence in this case of the fundamental elements in the Indiana case, are strikingly shown by the findings of Judge Nordbye in Donnelly Garment Co. v. International Union, 55 Fed. Supp. 572, l. c. 594. That Donnelly case was a suit for injunction by the Company against officers of the International to restrain the International from alleged threats of violence. The denial of injunction was sustained by the Court of Appeals in the case of Donnelly Company v. Dubinsky, 154 Fed. (2d) 38. Judge Nordbye stated:

> "It must be remembered that no violence has ever been perpetrated on any of the Donnelly employees or officials. No property of the plaintiff's has ever been injured by violence. No strike has ever been called."

Evidence otherwise admissible may and often should be excluded because it tends to introduce collateral issues diverting the attention of the triers of fact from the precise issues involved in the case and protracts the trial beyond reasonable limits. The admission or exclusion of such evidence rests very largely in the discretion of the trial judge, here the examiner, and the Board.

The foregoing proposition is elementary. The following is a characteristic statement of the law:

> "This general rule (admission of all relevant evidence), however, is subject to the important qualification that testimony which does have some tendency to establish a material fact may be rejected by a trial judge; and should be rejected, when its admission will have a tendency to divert the attention of the jury from the precise issues involved in the case, and protract the trial beyond reasonable limits.

This limitation of the general rule requiring all relevant testimony to be admitted to which we have last alluded, is not only reasonable in itself, but it is well supported by the authorities. * * *"

"It is always a question within the discretion of the trial judge as to how far parties may be permitted to go into collateral issues; such discretion being exercised by a fair consideration whether the evidence is relevant to the issue, its probable effect upon the jury, the likelihood of confusing the issues, and the probable time that will be consumed if such collateral issues are followed to their legitimate ends." New England Trust Co. v. Farr, 53 F. (2d) 103, l. c. 110.

The same principle is announced in 1, Greenleaf on Evidence, Section 14A, 16th Edition, wherein it is called the Doctrine of Collateral Inconvenience; Schradsky v. Stimson, 76 F. 730, l. c. 734; Lack v. C. B. & Q. Railroad Co., 281 Mo. 532, 219 S. W. 919, l. c. 922; Golden Reward Mining Co. v. Burton, 97 F. 413, l. c. 416; Westworth v. Smith, 44 N. H. 419, 82 Am. Dec. 228; Thompson v. Boucie, 4 Wall. 463, 471, 18 L. Ed. 423.

We submit the action of the examiner, approved by the Board, with respect to the evidence in question, was not such an abuse of discretion as to constitute reversible error even in a common law trial, much less a denial of due process of law.

POINT FOUR.

The examiner did receive and both the examiner and the Board did consider and weigh the employees' testimony (151 Fed. (2d) l. c. 871).

By employees' testimony, as used by the court and counsel, means the conclusionary evidence of employees as to their impulses and motives in joining the plant union.

which was excluded in the first hearing, but admitted in the second. The Court of Appeals by Judge Sanborn (l. c. 871) holds that in the second hearing there was no error in the receipt or rejection of such testimony and that this is a correct conclusion is demonstrated by the record.

However, both Judges Sanborn and Riddick declared and held that while such evidence had been properly admitted, yet neither the examiner nor the Board had given proper consideration and weight thereto (151 Fed. (2d) l. c. 871 and 877). The record conclusively shows that both the examiner and the Board not only received such evidence, but considered and weighed the same.

The examiner and the Board obeyed the court's direction and did receive the employees' testimony.

The trial examiner in his report stated:

> "The undersigned accorded the respondent and the DGWU an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected at the prior hearing * * *." (Volume X 3848.)

The Board's final report recites:

> "In remanding the case to the Board for further hearing the Circuit Court directed that the respondent and the DGWU be permitted to adduce the previously proffered testimony of respondent's employees to show, in substance, that they formed and joined the DGWU, of their own free will and that they were not influenced, interfered with, or coerced by the respondent in choosing that organization as their bargaining representative. In compliance with the Court's mandate and pursuant to the respective offers of proof, submitted by the respondent and the DGWU at the original hearing, the Board permitted the introduction of such testimony." (Vol. X 618-619. See also Vol. XIII 25.)

The trial examiner and the Board considered such testimony.

The trial examiner considered such evidence. He reported:

> "The undersigned accorded the respondent and the DGWU an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected at the prior hearing. * * * Upon the record thus made (manifestly including the employees' testimony which the examiner in the second preceding sentence stated that he had received), and from his observation of the witnesses, the undersigned makes, in addition to the foregoing the following findings of fact." (Vol. X 3848.)

The Board's finding recites:

> "In compliance with the Court's mandate and pursuant to the respective offers of proof submitted by the respondent and the DGWU at the original hearing the Board permitted the introduction of such testimony (employees' testimony), we have carefully considered all such evidence adduced by the respondent and the DGWU." (Vol. A 618-619.)

The Board weighed the employees' testimony.

> "We have carefully considered all such evidence (employees' testimony) adduced by the respondent and the DGWU. We find, however, that the testimony in question (employees' testimony) does not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the respondent committed acts of interference and assistance in the formation and administration of the DGWU, which subjected that organization to the respondent's domination and which thus removed from the employees' selection of the DGWU in complete freedom of choice which the act contemplates." (Vol. 13, 25-26.)

These recitals in the record must be taken as final.

These things deal with mental and subjective processes by the Board and the Board alone knows what those processes were. (Morgan v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773.) There is no room for mistake on the part of the Board in these clear and unambiguous statements in the record. Either the Board did, as by it declared, consider and weigh and did not arbitrarily disregard this evidence, or, the Board officially states that which it knows not to be true. The record demonstrates to a moral certainty that the recitals by the examiner and the Board are true.

The whole contention that the Board did not consider and give due weight to the employees' testimony is based upon the word "immaterial" in the Board's finding. (Vol. X 2526.)

An inordinate to-do is made by respondents over the use of the word "immaterial" in the Board's finding, as if its use destroyed all else the Board stated and declared and found. The contention entirely overlooks the indisputable fact that before the use of this word "immaterial" and entirely independent therof the Board had received, considered and weighed all of the evidence and had found that the employees' testimony did not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the Company was guilty of unfair labor practice, a function that Congress has placed exclusively with the Board and by it denied to the court.

Manifestly the Board did not mean, by the use of this word "immaterial," to indicate that such testimony should not be received, considered and weighed in light of the entire record, because that is precisely what the Board had already done.

POINT FIVE.

The Court of Appeals, in direct violation of the provisions of the Act, did itself weigh evidence.

The Court of Appeals sets its own opinion of the value and weight of such evidence (employees' evidence) against the opinion of the Board. The Board in its analysis of all the record, and its factual experience, held that such evidence was without weight. The court holds that the Board should have given some weight thereto. There is no escape from the conclusion that the court did undertake to weigh the evidence, fix the evidentiary value thereof, and hold that the Board had not given the weight and value to such testimony that the court thought it entitled to receive. Who is to determine whether given evidence is entitled to great weight, little weight or no weight? If the court is so to determine, then by what standard is the court to decide that the Board did not give proper weight and value to such evidence? Manifestly, the standard would have to be the court's judgment as to whether the given evidence was or was not entitled to weight. But this completes the circle and brings it back to the point of beginning, which is that the court is without power to weigh or to determine the proper weight of evidence, where there is substantial evidence to support the finding of the Board. He who decides whether the Board's action in weighing evidence is arbitrary or not arbitrary is himself weighing evidence and is exercising an authority the Board alone has and the court has not.

Point Six.

A careful reading of the opinions and a consideration of the entire record demonstrates that the Court of Appeals has treated its jurisdiction to review findings and orders of administrative boards as co-extensive with, similar and analogous to its judicial authority in legal proceedings as upon appeal from court to court.

This, in our judgment, is one of the most important questions in this case and constitutes a departure from fundamental and governing principle marking the distinction between judicial authority to review administrative acts on the one hand, and judicial authority upon appeal from court to court, upon the other.

The technical rules governing the interrelationship of judicial tribunals, including scope of authority upon appeal, are partly statutory, but more largely those defined by the courts themselves through long growth of jurisprudence. It is a fundamental error to attempt to apply these rules marking the scope of judicial authority on appeal from court to court to the judicial review of orders of administrative boards. The case of Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville, 309 U. S. 134, 60 S. Ct. 437, is illuminating and controlling. As marking the scope of that opinion, the court announced in the beginning that it was called upon to ascertain and enforce the spheres of authority which Congress has given to the Commission and the courts, respectively (309 U. S. 134). The Court said:

> "A much deeper issue, however, is here involved. This was not a mandate from court to court but from a court to an administrative agency. What is in issue is not the relationship of federal courts inter se—a relationship defined largely by the courts themselves—but the due observance by courts of the distribution of authority made by Congress as between its power to regulate commerce and the reviewing power which it has conferred upon the courts under Article III of the Constitution, U. S. C. A. A review by a federal court of the action of a lower court is only one phase of a single unified process. But to the extent that a federal court is authorized to review an administrative act, there is superimposed upon the enforcement of legislative policy through administrative control a different process from that out of which the administrative action under review ensued. The technical rules derived from the interrelationship of judicial tribunals forming a hierarchical system are taken out of their environment when mechanically applied to determine the extent to which Congressional power, exercised through a delegated agency, can be controlled within the limited scope of 'judicial power' conferred by Congress under the Constitution.'' 60 S. Ct. l. c. 440-441.

The court also said:

"But to assimulate the relation of these administrative bodies and the courts to the relationship between lower and upper courts is to disregard the origin and purposes of the movement for administrative regulation and at the same time to disregard the traditional scope, however far-reaching, of the judicial process. Unless these vital differentiations between the functions of judicial and administrative tribunals are observed, courts will stray outside their province and read the laws of Congress through the distorting lenses of inapplicable legal doctrine." 60 S. Ct. l. c. 442.

The opinions of the Court of Appeals could just as well have been written upon appeal in a law case wherein a jury had passed upon the facts. There is no authority that the Court of Appeals could properly exercise in a law appeal that it does not expressly or by necessary assumption employ in this case. The action of the court in setting aside the order of the Board, on account of procedural errors such as nice questions as to the receipt or rejection of evidence, qualifications of the examiner, weight to be granted to given evidence, and the like, is no whit different from the action of such court on an appeal in setting aside the judgment of the lower court because of similar errors. The court failed to note the "vital differentiations" between the functions of judicial and administrative tribunals and did "stray outside their province and read the laws of Congress through the distorting lenses of inapplicable legal doctrine." (60 S. Ct. l. c. 442.)

No doubt Congress could grant such scope of review of administrative orders to the courts, but on the other hand there is no doubt that it has not done so. The question of the scope of such review has been debated at length between two schools of thought upon what such scope should be. Some advocate that the court should be authorized to review such findings as if the case was on appeal in equity, including determination of the weight of evidence. Others have contended that there should be no statutory review whatever, but that the review should be confined to the constitutional questions, which authority needs no statute. The middle ground is that adopted by Congress, which is in most instances confined to the determination of whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings. Since Congress has acted with respect to the limit of review of orders of the National Labor Relations Board, further discussion, so far as that Act is concerned, must necessarily be confined to the Halls of Congress. The field cannot be expanded by judicial legislation.

Principles of Public Administrative Law Here Involved.

Public administrative law is a comparative newcomer in American Jurisprudence (42 Am. Jur. 287). Professor of Law, now Mr. Justice Frankfurter, describes administrative law by saying that it deals with the field of control exercised by agencies other than courts, and the field of control exercised by courts over such agencies (75 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 615). An extended and learned article upon public administrative law, dealing with its history, the conditions with which it concerns itself, its relation to common law principles and procedure, and the authority and limitation upon authority of the courts, is contained in 42 Am. Jur. 281 and following. The principles herein stated, in our judgment, are firmly established by court decisions and law writers. The leading case, of course, is the Pottsville case, see Morgan v. U. S., 304 U. S. 1, 58 S. Ct. 773; address of Elihu Root to the American Bar Association, 41 ABA Rep. 355, and following; Fréund "Cases on Administrative Law," page 3; Ralph F. Fuchs, 47 Yale Law Journal, 538; Professor Frankfurter, 75 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 615.

The subject matter is far too extended to cover in a brief.

It is our submission that the decision of the Court of Appeals is in conflict with the foregoing fundamental principles as announced in these authorities.

POINT SEVEN.

Failure of the Board to designate a trial examiner for the second hearing, other than the one who conducted the first hearing.

It is difficult to determine what, if anything, the Court of Appeals ruled on this question. Judge Sanborn expressly ruled that the proceedings of the Board did not lack due process because of alleged bias or prejudice against the Company or the plant union. He likewise expressly ruled as follows:

> "We think that it cannot be said that it appears from the record of the proceedings before the examiner and before the Board that there was denial of due process because of bias or prejudice, or collusion."

Judge Woodrough ruled that the examiner was properly qualified:

> "Neither do I find evidence of bias or prejudice to disqualify the examiner in this case. He seems to me to have ruled in accord with the dictates of his conscience and to have endeavored, against great resistance, to keep the trial within the rational relation to the charges to be tried." 151 Fed. (2d) l. c. 880.

Judge Riddick, in his concurring opinion l. c. 877, specifies the grounds upon which he holds that there was a denial of due process, but he does not mention as one of said grounds the failure to appoint a new examiner.

Judge Sanborn (l. c. 870) mildly criticizes the Board, but does not say that its action in this respect constituted a denial of due process.

The examiner was not disqualified because in prior proceeding he had expressed the then opinion that certain evidence was immaterial. Walker v. United States, 116 Fed. (2d) 458 (9 CCA); Ryan v. United States, 99 Fed. (2d) 864; Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Co., 124 Fed. (2d) 440; O'Malley v. United States, 128 Fed. (2d) 676 (8 CCA); Berger v. United States, 255 U. S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230.

A continuation in office of the examiner for further proceedings was peculiarly appropriate because of his knowledge of the issues and familiarity with some 5000 pages of testimony. There is nothing in the record to show that the consideration given by the examiner of the employees' evidence was influenced to any degree by his former opinion before the court had spoken. There is nothing to show that after the court's ruling in the first case the examiner prejudged the testimony without weight before he received and reconsidered it. There is nothing to show that the reconsideration of the evidence, both by the examiner and the Board, was not in good faith, a true reconsideration and reweighing.

The authority of the Board to correct errors upon the part of the examiner is far broader than the authority of the court correcting mistakes upon the part of the judge. The trial examiner has no authority to rule finally on anything. The Board may send the case back to the examiner to take further evidence, to make other and different rulings. So far as the merits of the case are concerned, the report of the examiner at best is but advisory and may be accepted or rejected or modified by the Board itself. If it be good law that a judge is not to be disqualified because of his previous opinions and rulings, even in the same case, then it is also good law that an examiner is not to be disqualified for such reason.

The contention that under this record that there was a denial of due process because the Board failed to appoint another examiner after the remand, is, in our judgment, trivial.

Respectfully submitted,

CLIF LANGSDALE,
CLYDE TAYLOR,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

922 Scarritt Building,
Kansas City, Missouri.

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1945.

No. 787.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER,

VS.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE 8TH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF OF RESPONDENT, DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, IN OPPOSITION.

ROBERT J. INGRAHAM,
BURR S. STOTTLE,
Attorneys for Respondent, Donnelly Garment Company.

REED, INGRAHAM & MILLIGAN

INDEX

Opinions Below 1
Jurisdiction 2
Preliminary Statement 2

Argument—

I. Petitioner's Point "One" (pp. 24-25) 4
II. Petitioner's Point "Two" (pp. 25-27) 5
III. Petitioner's Points "Three and Four" (pp. 27-29) 8
IV. Petitioner's Point "Five" (p. 29) 10
V. Petitioner's Point "Six" (pp. 29-30) 10

Table of Cases

Donnelly Garment Co. vs. NLRB, 151 F. 2d 854 1
Donnelly Garment Co. vs. NLRB, 123 F. 2d 215 1
Ex parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35, 44 9
Federal Communications Commission vs. Pottsville Broadcasting Company, 308 U. S. 34 ..... 7, 10
Hill vs. Florida, 65 S. Ct. 1273 9
NLRB vs. Indiana and Michigan Elec. Co., 318 U. S. 9 ..... 4, 6, 7
NLRB vs. Laister-Kauffmann Aircraft Corp., (8 C. C. A.) 144 F. 2d 9, 16 4
NLRB vs. Bradford Dyeing Association, 310 U. S. 318, 342 5-6
O'Malley vs. United States, 128 F. 2d 676 9
Ryan vs. United States, 99 F. 2d 864 9

Statutes

Judicial Code, Section 240(a) 2
National Labor Relations Act, Sections 10(e) and (f) 2

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1945.

No. 787.

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION, PETITIONER,

VS.

DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, DONNELLY GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AND NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE 8TH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF OF RESPONDENT, DONNELLY GARMENT COMPANY, IN OPPOSITION.

OPINIONS BELOW.

The opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals (XIII, 7-64) are reported in 151 F. 2d 854. Prior opinions of the Circuit Court of Appeals in this case are reported in 123 F. 2d 215.

JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the act of February 13, 1925, and Sections 10(e) and (f) of the National Labor Relations Act.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT.

This is a companion case to Cause No. 786 pending in this Court, and is based upon the same record. Most of the points raised in this proceeding have been answered in our brief in opposition to Cause No. 786, to which we respectfully refer the Court.

Petitioner here is more restrained in its statement of the facts and issues than was the Labor Board in its companion petition in Cause No. 786—but petitioner here has also made some misstatements to which we call the Court's attention:

In the heading at the top of page 10, petitioner says: "Factually the record supports the Board's findings. This is conceded by the opinions." This is followed by the statement: "The opinion makes exceedingly clear that from a factual standpoint there was substantial and sufficient evidence to show that the company was guilty of the unfair labor practices charged." Such statements are completely erroneous. The Court below in its majority opinion expressly refused to pass upon the question whether the Board's findings were supported by the evidence; the Court merely summarized each party's contentions and then said (XIII, 37):

"The question as to which is the true picture, in so far as that presents a question of fact, is not a matter with which this Court can concern itself."

Petitioner makes the same erroneous statement on page 12—"all this where admittedly there was substantial and sufficient evidence to support the findings of the Board." There is no such admission. That was one of the main controverted issues before the Labor Board and before the Court below.

And again at page 24: "Once it is conceded, as here, that the findings and order were supported by substantial evidence, * * *." There is no such concession here.

Under Item "Two," page 12, petitioner "begs the question" in its statement of the question presented—it assumes that the excluded evidence is not "direct, fundamental, and vital," but that it is only "incidental or collateral." Respondent claims (and the Court below held), that the evidence is vital, in fact so vital that its exclusion constituted a denial of due process.

ARGUMENT.

I.

Petitioner's Point "One" (pp. 24-25).

Petitioner here argues that "even if" the Board is required to receive material evidence, "what it does with such evidence so received is not subject to judicial review" (p. 25). We disagree. An administrative body may not arbitrarily disregard material evidence.

In NLRB v. Indiana and Michigan Elec. Co., 318 U. S. 9, this court held:

> "Findings cannot be said to have been fairly reached unless material evidence which might impeach, as well as that which will support, its findings, is heard and weighed" (l. c. 28).

In NLRB v. Laister-Kauffmann Aircraft Corp., (8 C. C. A.) 144 F. 2d 9, the Court said (l. c. 16):

> "It is undoubtedly true that a Board which with 'studied design' ignores all the evidence adduced by the employer and views as truthful only the testimony of adverse witnesses, acts arbitrarily and not in accord with legal requirements. NLRB v. Sartorious Co., 2 Cir., 140 F. 2d 203, 205; NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, Inc., 9 Cir., 99 F. 2d 153, 177; NLRB v. Greider Machine Tool & Die Co., 6 Cir., 142 F. 2d 163, 165. 'Testimony is the raw material out of which we construct truth and, unless all of it is weighed in its totality, errors will result and great injustices be wrought.' NLRB v. Thompson Products, Inc., 6 Cir., 97 F. 2d 13, 15. And Section 10(e) of the Act, 49 Stat. 453, 29 U. S. C. A., Sec. 160(e), which provides that 'The findings of the Board as > to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive,' does not, of course compel the courts to accept findings reached by accepting evidence presented by one side to the controversy with total disregard for other worthy evidence before the Board. NLRB v. Union Pacific Stages, supra."

Here the Board arbitrarily refused to put the employees' testimony on the scales, because it "adhered to its opinion" (A, 619) that said testimony did not possess the quality of "materiality"—a quality which the Court had held that it did possess. By such refusal, the Board vitiated its order.

The Court did not "weigh" such evidence as against other evidence, but it had a right to determine whether the rejected evidence was material. The only way it could do that was to consider it in the light of the issues involved. That is the only "weighing" of the evidence by the Court below—and when, by this process, it found and held that the rejected evidence was material and remanded the case to the Board to receive and consider it, the Court had a right to expect that the Board would not arbitrarily disregard such evidence as immaterial. When the Board refused to accept the spirit or letter of the remand, the Court had the right, in fact the duty, to refuse to lend its enforcement powers to the Board's order, reached in total disregard of material evidence.

II.

Petitioner's Point "Two" (pp. 25-27).

Petitioner here makes a tenuous distinction between "due process" and "procedural due process." It cites NLRB v. Bradford Dyeing Association, 310 U. S. 318, in support thereof. There is no such distinction. If a litigant is deprived of a material procedural right, it is just as much a denial of due process as though he were denied a "substantive" right or whatever kind of right petitioner deems to be included in the term "due process." The very words "due process" connote procedure. Nor does the Bradford case support petitioner's contention—in fact in that very case, this court uses the expression "procedural due process," saying l. c. 342:

> "If the Board * * * has, on a charge of unfair labor practice, held a hearing * * * comporting with the standards of fairness inherent in procedural due process * * *"

—then the Court of Appeals should enforce the Board's order.

(By implication this means that if the hearing does not comport with such standards of procedural due process, the Court should not enforce it.)

Counsel for the petitioner seem to think that if an error on the part of the Board is "procedural," the Circuit Court of Appeals has no right because thereof to refuse enforcement of the Board's order. But the error of the Board in the Michigan and Indiana case, supra, was of the same general type as the error of the Board here, namely, the rejection of evidence which the Circuit Court of Appeals thought the Board should have received. In other words, the matter turns not on whether the right denied a litigant is procedural or substantive but on whether he is denied a material right. If evidence which is excluded, whether by the Labor Board or by a Court, is competent and material and might reasonably change the course of decision, then its exclusion is denial of a fair trial and of due process.

Who is to pass judgment upon that question? The Board has that right, in the first instance; but Congress has vested in the Circuit Court of Appeals the power and discretion (subject to certain limitations) of enforcing or not enforcing the Board's orders. One of the grounds on which that Court may refuse to enforce an order of the Board is the Board's refusal to receive and consider competent, material evidence; and the Court's decision thereon should not be disturbed unless its decision is "not only erroneous" but is so far wrong as to constitute an "abuse of its judicial power and discretion" (Indiana and Michigan case, supra, l. c. 16).

We have discussed the competency and materiality of the rejected evidence in question, and the correctness of the Court's rulings thereon, in our brief in the companion proceeding No. 786, and to save repetition, we respectfully refer the Court thereto.

Nor is there any conflict between the decision below and this Court's decision in Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Company, 308 U. S. 34, cited by petitioner at page 27. That case involved an application for permission to construct a broadcasting station at Pottsville, Pennsylvania. The Commission had erred in applying the law with respect to the applicant's financial responsibility. The Circuit Court of Appeals pointed out the legal error and remanded the case "for reconsideration in accordance with the views expressed" by the Court. The Commission in the meantime had received similar applications from other companies and set them all down for hearing "on a comparative basis." The Court thereupon issued mandamus directing the Commission to set aside its order for such hearing on a comparative basis and directed it to hear and reconsider the original application on the record originally made. This Court held that in so doing, the Circuit Court of Appeals exceeded its authority.

There is no similarity between that situation and the situation here. There the Commission did not disregard the Court's remand—it merely did other things, within its province, in addition to what the Court had directed. Here the Board refused to consider as material (A., 619) evidence which the Court had by its previous decision directed should be considered as material. If the Commission in the Pottsville case, on the second hearing, had again misapplied the law in determining the question of financial responsibility, the Pottsville case would present a situation more analogous to the case at bar, and in such event we respectfully submit that the Circuit Court of Appeals would have been justified in again reversing the Commission. Furthermore, the Circuit Court of Appeals, in the Pottsville case sought to interfere with the scope of the Commission's proceeding; here there was no interference with the scope of the Board's procedure. If the Board here on the second hearing had sought to bring in the "John Doe Garment Co." as a co-defendant and the Circuit Court of Appeals by mandamus had ordered the Board not to do so the situation would have been somewhat similar to that in the Pottsville case. We respectfully submit that the Court's rulings here in no wise invade the province of administrative agencies. Here the Court merely refused to lend its enforcement powers to the order of the Board, based upon a proceeding in which the respondent had been denied a fair hearing. That is a proper function of the Circuit Court of Appeals, in Labor Board cases, specifically conferred upon it by Congress. There is no conflict with the Pottsville case.

III.

Petitioner's Points "Three and Four" (pp. 27-29).

This point (refusal of the Board to designate a different Trial Examiner for the second hearing) has been discussed under point I(b) of our brief in companion case No. 786, to which we respectfully refer the Court.

The case of Hill v. Florida, 65 S. Ct. 1273, cited by petitioner (p. 28), involves a point so wholly different from the case at bar as to require no discussion.

Nor do any of the cases cited at the top of page 29 conflict with the rulings of the Court below. They hold that a judge's bias must be based on something other than his rulings in the case, which may be corrected on appeal. Two of the cases cited (Ryan v. United States, 99 F. 2d 864, and O'Malley v. United States, 128 F. 2d 676) are by the Court below, which Court therefore was quite familiar with those rulings and obviously did not in the case at bar intend to rule contrary thereto. Respondent's objection to Trial Examiner Batten, and the Court's ruling thereon, are not based merely upon Batten's erroneous rulings (of which there were many) but on the fact that he had pre-judged as worthless highly important evidence offered by respondent and could not in a later hearing fairly evaluate such testimony, as respondent had a right to have it evaluated by the Trial Examiner. In the O'Malley case the court said of the ruling in question "there was no pre-judgment of guilt in any remark that the court made * * *"—in the remarks of Batten there was pre-judgment and the pre-judgment was equivalent to a pre-judgment of guilt for it deprived respondent of the benefit of perhaps its most important evidence.

In Ex parte American Steel Barrel Co., 230 U. S. 35, this court said, l. c. 44, that the purpose of the Statute was not to disqualify a judge because of his erroneous Rulings, which could be corrected on appeal, but to "prevent his future action in the pending cause."

Here Batten's "future action in the pending cause" could not be fair and unbiased, as he had pre-judged respondent's evidence as worthless.

IV.

Petitioner's Point "Five" (p. 29).

Petitioner does not argue this point. However, we have discussed it under Point I(a) of our brief in cause No. 786.

V.

Petitioner's Point "Six" (pp. 29-30).

Petitioner complains (p. 29) that "There is not a single authority that the Circuit Court of Appeals could properly exercise in such a law appeal that it does not either expressly or by necessary implication employ in this case." Even so, that does not necessarily constitute any impropriety. Most of the rules applicable to one are also applicable to the other. The Court here did not violate any rule applicable to administrative agencies, as was done in the Pottsville case, supra. If either a court or an administrative agency deprives a litigant of due process, the Circuit Court of Appeals has authority to reverse the lower court's judgment or refuse to enforce the administrative board's order. That is all the Court has done here. It has not invaded any province of the Labor Board in so doing.

The rules governing the jurisdiction and duties of the Circuit Court of Appeals in Labor Board cases have frequently been enunciated by this Court and are well known to the various Circuit Courts of Appeals. The limitations on invading the powers of administrative bodies have been established by the Pottsville and Fry cases cited by petitioner, page 27. There is no need for this Court to reiterate them.

Petitioner has not presented any substantial grounds for the granting of certiorari herein and its petition should be denied.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT J. INGRAHAM,
BURR S. STOTTLE,
Attorneys for Respondent, Donnelly Garment Company.

REED, INGRAHAM & MILLIGAN,
Of Counsel.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Nos. 38 and 39.—October Term, 1946.

National Labor Relations Board, Petitioner, 38 v. Donnelly Garment Company, Donnelly Garment Workers' Union, and International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.	On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.
International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, Petitioner, 39 v. Donnelly Garment Company, Donnelly Garment Workers' Union and National Labor Relations Board.

[March 3, 1947.]

Mr. Justice Frankfurter delivered the opinion of the Court.

On March 6, 1940, the National Labor Relations Board, on finding that the Donnelly Garment Company had engaged in labor practices condemned as "unfair" by the Wagner Act, issued an order against the Company "to effectuate the policies" of the Act. The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit denied enforcement of the order and remanded the case to the Board. 123 F. 2d 215. After carrying out what it conceived to be the directions of the Court, the Board again found against the Company. The Court below denied enforcement of the Board's second order "for want of due process in the proceedings upon which the order is based." 151 F. 2d 854. The correctness of this ruling is now before us, for we brought the case here, 327 U. S. 775, to rule on important issues in the administration of the Wagner Act. This protracted litigation has given rise to a swarm of questions. In view of the fact that the case comes to us after it has been twice before the Board and three times before the court below, on a record of thirteen volumes with a total of more than 5000 pages, even an earnest attempt at compactness cannot avoid a somewhat extended opinion.

The case presents limited legal phases of one of those bitter, unedifying conflicts with which American industrial history is unfortunately replete. For other litigation growing out of this strife, see 20 F. Supp. 767; 21 F. Supp. 807; 304 U. S. 243; 23 F. Supp. 998; 99 F. 2d 309; 119 F. 2d 892; 121 F. 2d 561; 47 F. Supp. 61; 47 F. Supp. 65; 47 F. Supp. 67; 55 F. Supp. 572; 55 F. Supp. 587; 147 F. 2d 246; 154 F. 2d 38. It has its roots in a campaign by the International Ladies Garment Workers Union (hereafter designated as International) to unionize the women's garment industry in Kansas City, Missouri. Because of its importance, the Donnelly Garment Company (to be called Company for short) became the particular target of these unionizing efforts. These continued with varying intensity over a period of years but met with little success among the Company's employees.

In 1938, International began proceedings before the Board charging the Company with a series of unfair labor practices in violation of §§ 2 (6), (7) and 8 (1), (2), (3) of the National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 449, 29 U. S. C. §§ 151 et seq. The main charge was that the Company, to counteract the efforts of International, had stimulated the formation of a plant union, the Donnelly Garment Workers Union (hereafter called Union) and had dominated it through financial and other aid. Following the usual procedure there was a hearing before a trial examiner. At the hearing, the Examiner rejected an offer by the Company to prove, through the testimony of 1200 employees, that they had not been coerced by the Company to join Union, but that each of them had done so of his own free will, and that they had no knowledge of Company influence in the affairs of Union. The Examiner also excluded evidence to show that the formation of the Union followed strike threats and violence by International, successful against smaller competitors of the Company, to coerce the Company into a closed-shop agreement with International. To these and other less important exclusions the Company duly excepted on the submission of the Trial Examiner's intermediate report. The Board upheld the Examiner's rulings on evidence, accepted his findings of fact, and, with a qualification not here relevant, adopted his recommendations. Thereupon it issued the usual cease-and-desist order, and directed the disestablishment of Union and reimbursement to employees of the amount of the dues which the Company had checked off on behalf of Union (21 N. L. R. B. 164).

Review of this order came before the Circuit Court of Appeals on the Company's petition to set it aside and on the Board's cross-petition for its enforcement. On several contentions, the disposition of which is relevant to the questions now calling for decision, the Court sustained the Board. It found no basis for setting aside the proceedings as unfair on the claim that either the Examiner or the Board was biased. It held that the Board properly limited the evidence to issues raised by the complaint, and since International was not on trial it found no impropriety in the exclusion of evidence offered to prove its misconduct. The Court did however find that the Company had been denied a fair hearing in not being allowed to present the testimony of its employees to the effect that Union was truly independent and that they had joined it voluntarily. The Court remanded the case to the Board "for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this Court".

The Board thereupon set the case for a second hearing before the original Examiner. Insisting that he was biased and had prejudged as valueless "the evidence to be adduced at the pending hearing", the Company moved for a new trial examiner. The Board denied the application and the case proceeded to hearing. This time the Examiner heard eleven of the 1200 employees named in the offer of proof rejected in the earlier proceeding, but declined to hear the rest on the ground that their testimony would be merely cumulative. He allowed the President of the Company, whom illness had kept from the earlier hearing, to testify fully. Otherwise, he received no evidence that had been available but was not offered at the earlier proceeding, and excluded all evidence of events subsequent to the termination of the first hearing. The Examiner's findings and recommendations, in respects here material, were substantially the same as those he had previously made, and the Board, acting upon his intermediate report, issued virtually the same order. 50 N. L. R. B. 241. The Company again petitioned the Circuit Court of Appeals to set aside the order, and the Board again requested its enforcement. During the pendency of these proceedings, the Company invoked § 10 (e) of the Wagner Act and asked the Court leave to adduce before the Board evidence which it claimed had been erroneously excluded. This motion was not granted. Instead, as already noted, the Court denied the Board's petition for enforcement "for want of due process in the proceedings upon which the order is based." 151 F. 2d 854, 875. The Court set forth its views in a careful opinion of more than thirty pages in the printed record. There was also a concurring opinion, and a dissent.

The Court canvassed many items of evidence. As to some of the Board's rulings which it disapproved, the Court stated explicitly that by themselves they would not have afforded sufficient ground for reversal. Rulings which individually would not invalidate an order of the Board do not in combination acquire the necessary strength to undo what the Board, acting under authority given it by Congress, has done. We do not find that in their combination these rulings amounted to unfairness. We must therefore consider one by one those objections which the Court deemed sufficient to vitiate the Board's order. For the Court below did not suggest that the Board as a tribunal was so biased as to be incapable of fair judgment in this case. It found that such a finding against the Board was not justified.

First. The controlling basis of the Court's finding of unfairness in the Board proceedings related to testimony proffered by the Company at the second hearing before the Examiner. This second hearing was not a new proceeding. It was a stage in a process consisting of the first proceeding before the Board, the remand resulting from review of the Board's order in the Circuit Court of Appeals, and the second proceeding before the Board in response to this remand. The correctness of the Court's judgment refusing enforcement of the Board's second order must be judged in the light of the interrelation of the two proceedings before the Board, and the Board's justifiable interpretation of the directions which it received upon remand of the first order. Indeed, the disposition of the present case turns decisively on the view that is taken of the Board's interpretation of its duty under the Court's mandate.

It becomes necessary therefore to revert to the precise terms of the Court's mandate. The order was remanded by the Circuit Court of Appeals "to said Labor Board for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this Court." The Court's opinion yields this gloss upon its mandate:

> "Our conclusion is that the petition of the Board for enforcement of the order under review must be denied. We think that the least that the Board can do, in order to cure the defects in its procedure caused by the failure of the Trial Examiner to receive admissible evidence, is to vacate the order and the findings and conclusions upon which it is based; to accord to the petitioners [the Company and the plant union] an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the Trial Examiner; and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order." 123 F. 2d 215, 225.

The Board based its new order upon the record of the first proceeding, reopening the hearing only for the purpose of admitting the erroneously excluded testimony of the employees. In short, the Board did not understand the remand to call for a new trial. The Court, when called upon to construe it four years later, took a different view of the meaning of its decision of November, 1941: "It is, we think, apparent that what this Court, in effect, ruled was that the Company and the plant union were entitled to a new trial upon the evidence already taken and such competent and material evidence as might be proffered upon a further hearing." 151 F. 2d 854, 856. From this point of view, the Court could readily conclude that the record which came to it "presents an incomplete picture."

We have recognized that "the court that issues a mandate is normally the best judge of its content, on the general theory that the author of a document is ordinarily the authoritative interpreter of its purposes." But, we continued, "it is not even true that a lower court's interpretation of its mandate is controlling here. Compare United States v. Morgan, 307 U. S. 183. Therefore, we would not be foreclosed by the interpretation which the Court of Appeals gave to its mandate, even if it had been directed to a lower court." Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting, 309 U. S. 134, 141. Here, as in that case, a much deeper issue is involved. As we had occasion to point out in the Pottsville case, there are significant differences between the relations of an appellate court to a lower court and those of a court to a law-enforcing agency, like the Board, whose order is subject only to restricted judicial review. These differences may be particularly telling upon remand of an order to the agency. Due regard for these differences must guide us through the maze of details in this case.

In the context of the opinion remanding the Board's original order and of the nature of the administrative process with which it is entrusted, the Board was justified in not deeming itself under duty to grant a "new trial" in the sense in which a lower court must start anew when an upper court directs such a new trial. There was no reference to a "new trial", nor was any intimation given that such was the breadth of what the remand required. From the Court's opinion there appears only a very restricted dissatisfaction with the original proceedings before the Board, calling for a correspondingly restricted correction. "The least that the Board can do", wrote the court, "is . . . to accord the petitioners an opportunity to introduce all of the competent and material evidence which was rejected by the trial Examiner; and to receive and consider such evidence together with all other competent and material evidence in the record before making new findings and a new order." 123 F. 2d at 225. "The least that the Board can do" may well imply that the Board is authorized to draw on the wide scope of its statutory discretion. But to advise the Board of "the least that [it] can do" does not put the Board in default for not doing more. Due process does not afford a party the right to treat as a rehearsal a hearing on the issues for which the hearing was adequate. And the Wagner Act does not require that ground be covered a second time or piecemeal.

Second. Since in our view the remand did not call for a proceeding de novo, the Board was not required to reopen any issue as to which its ruling was left unassailed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in its first decision. We shall therefore consider the particular defects which the Circuit Court of Appeals found in the second hearing, by treating that hearing not as a new trial but as the sequel of the first hearing under a remand by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the limited purpose of correcting the prior erroneous exclusion of testimony.

(1) The Board's decision that the Company had engaged in unfair labor practices to a large extent turned on the Company's relation to the plant union. It is fair to infer that the lower court's denial of enforcement of the Board's order was influenced most by its finding that the Trial Examiner and the Board did not comply with the Court's mandate on the first review regarding the proffer of testimony of the Company's employees to the effect that they voluntarily organized and joined the Union and that, to their knowledge, its affairs were uninfluenced by the Company. At the second hearing the Examiner admitted the testimony of eleven such employees, excluding further oral testimony of the same nature as merely cumulative. The court below did not quarrel with confining this line of testimony to eleven witnesses. But it reached the view that neither the Examiner nor the Board took this testimony into account in reaching the findings on which the Board's second order was based. It was principally from this that the Court concluded that the Company was denied the full hearing to secure which the case was remanded to the Board.

According to an early English judge, "The devil himself knoweth not the mind of man", and a modern reviewing court is not much better equipped to lay bare unexposed mental processes. It is a grave responsibility to conclude that in admitting the testimony of the Company's employees, the Board went through a mere pretense of obedience to the Court's direction, and heard the testimony with a deaf ear and a closed mind. In light of the authority with which Congress has endowed the Board, and with due regard to the conscientiousness which we must attribute to another branch of the Government, we cannot reject its explicit avowal that it did take into account evidence which it should have considered unless an examination of the whole record puts its acceptance beyond reason. Since this matter is crucial, it is appropriate to quote fully the Board's decision on the point:

> "In remanding the case to the Board for further hearing, the Circuit Court directed that the respondent [the Company] and the D. G. W. U. [the plant union] be permitted to adduce the previously proffered testimony of respondent's [the Company's] employees to show, in substance, that they formed and joined the D. G. W. U. of their own free will and that they were not influenced, interfered with, or coerced by the respondent in choosing that organization as their bargaining representative. In compliance with the Court's mandate and pursuant to the respective offers of proof submitted by the respondent and the D. G. W. U. at the original hearing, the Board permitted the introduction of such testimony. We have carefully considered all such evidence adduced by the respondent and the D. G. W. U. We find, however, that the testimony in question does not overcome more positive evidence in the record that the respondent committed acts of interference and assistance in the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. which subjected that organization to the respondent's domination and which removed from the employees' selection of the D. G. W. U. the complete freedom of choice which the Act contemplates. Since we find the testimony here adduced totally unpersuasive that the employees voluntarily designated the D. G. W. U., we are moreover impelled to adhere to the opinion, derived from our experience in administration of the Act, that conclusionary evidence of this nature is immaterial to issues such as those presented in this case. A consideration of all the evidence convinces us, and we find, that the respondent dominated and interfered with the formation and administration of the D. G. W. U. and contributed support thereto; and that the respondent thereby interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act." 50 N. L. R. B. 241.

We cannot read this otherwise than as an assurance by the Board that it did not merely go through the motions of allowing the testimony of these witnesses to get into the record as an empty formality, but that it duly heeded the order of the Court and reflected upon the testimony. The Board judged of its worth, as it had a right to, in light of the mass of other testimony in the case, and found it unpersuasive. Had the Board said no more the court below could hardly have found disregard of its mandate. The Board's skeptical expression regarding this kind of testimony hardly disproves obedience to the Court's mandate. Even lower courts sometime indicate disagreement with a ruling they are bound to enforce. Out of repeated instances of hearing the same thing a generalization as to its worth will almost inevitably emerge in the thoughts of a tribunal. As to this sort of testimony, it has been observed that a feeling by employees "that they were under no sense of constraint . . . is a subtle thing, and the recognition of constraint may call for a high degree of introspective perception." Judge Magruder in Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 114 F. 2d, 930, 937. We are not called upon to lay down a general rule of materiality regarding such testimony. Suffice it to say that the Board obeyed the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals that the testimony of the Company's employees regarding Union was to be adduced and considered. Its probative value was for the Board. See Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 146, 163. And the Court did not rule that the rest of the record repelled the Board's assurance that it "carefully considered" the evidence the Court bade it to consider. It expressly withheld consideration of the Board's order on the basis of the whole record.

(2) The new testimony of the Donnelly employees led to rulings on evidence by the Examiner, approved by the Board, which in the view of the Court below, contributed to render the hearing unfair. The testimony related to the offensive aspect of International's unionizing efforts and the bearing of this upon the claim of Company that Union was quite independent and not the Company's instrument. The employees were allowed to testify that they were antagonized by acts of violence on the part of International and that they sought self-protection in a union of their own, voluntarily formed. The Examiner limited this line of testimony to acts of violence within six months preceding the organization of Union. This was based on the notion that a time limit had to be drawn somewhere in ascertaining the effect of known violence in persuading Donnelly employees to form their own union, and that a period longer than six months was too remote, or, in any event, had not sufficient probative value. Surely this was a reasonable ruling by the hearing-tribunal. At any rate it was not so circumscribing of proof in establishing the issue toward which the evidence was directed as to call for correction. But it is urged that while the Company was so restricted on proof of this issue the Board allowed evidence further back calculated to show a continuous state of mind toward influencing employee association by the Company. By way of rebuttal to the employees' testimony that the plant union of 1937 was a spontaneous effort of the employees wholly uninfluenced by the Company, the Board admitted evidence to show that the Company fostered a company union in 1935. It does not follow that the limitation of time on admissible evidence is the same regardless of the issue for which the evidence is tendered. Certainly we cannot say that it was not admissible to allow this evidence of company coercion in 1935 as bearing on the independence of the new plant union in 1937. And so we cannot find a solid enough ground to establish discriminatory treatment by the Board because on this issue it went back to 1935 whereas on the issue of the influence of International's violence in the formation of the 1937 plant union, it drew the line at events six months prior thereto.

(3) While we think that the Board properly construed the scope of the remand not to require a retrial of issues canvassed at the first hearing, time does not stop still even for the administrative process. Change in circumstances may make relevant at the second hearing what was irrelevant at the first hearing. The Circuit Court of Appeals found such a change in circumstances in a decision of this Court rendered after the first review below. In its decision of November 6, 1941, the Circuit Court of Appeals sustained the exclusion by the Board of testimony to prove misdeeds by International. The tenor of its reasoning was that an inquiry into charges of unfair labor practices by the Company did not make relevant charges of misconduct against International, the complainant. The Board issued the order now challenged on June 9, 1943. In the meantime, on January 18, 1943, this Court decided National Labor Relations Board v. Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 318 U. S. 9. That case, so the court below thought, required the admission at the second hearing of the offer of proof regarding International's acts of violence.

We regard this as a misapplication of the Indiana & Michigan case. This case is not that case. They have in common an accusation of grave misconduct against a complainant before the Board. Otherwise, the circumstances of the two cases, and the legal issues they raise, are very different. The Indiana & Michigan case involved a proceeding under § 10 (e) of the National Labor Relations Act authorizing the Circuit Court of Appeals to order additional evidence to be taken before the Board when it is shown "to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence" at the hearing. We had previously held that such an application "was addressed to the sound judicial discretion of the court". Southport Petroleum Co. v. Labor Board, 315 U. S. 100, 104. Section 10 (e) in effect formulates a familiar principle regarding newly discovered evidence. Even without such explicitness this Court has, on occasion, not allowed administrative orders to stand where there has been a drastic change in circumstances. In Indiana & Michigan the offer of proof related to events subsequent to the Board's hearing, tending to show acts of serious violence on behalf of a complaining union. The Board had refused to reopen the case and the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit granted the application under § 10 (e). We held that, in the light of the circumstances before it, the Circuit Court of Appeals did not abuse its discretion in ordering additional evidence to be taken before the Board. The proffered testimony was held relevant on three grounds: (1) Inasmuch as the Board, by the very nature of its case load, must exercise discretion in entertaining complaints, the newly revealed misconduct on the part of the complainant might affect, not the jurisdiction of the Board, but the exercise of its power to entertain a charge; (2) the new evidence bore materially upon the credibility of some important witnesses before the Board; (3) the Board had attributed to the Company responsibility for the conduct of some of its supervisory employees, and the new evidence might lead the Board to conclude that their conduct was to be attributed to self-interest and not charged against the employer.

Here we have a totally different situation. We are not reviewing an allowable exercise of judicial discretion by the Circuit Court of Appeals in ordering the Board to hear newly discovered evidence. On review of its order, the Board cannot be compelled to admit evidence which it excluded unless such exclusion was clearly insupportable. The power to adduce additional evidence granted to the Circuit Court of Appeals by § 10 (e) cannot be employed to enlarge the statutory scope of judicial review. The short of the matter is that the Court deemed it reversible error on the part of the Board not to entertain testimony on a matter which the court deemed irrelevant to the issues at the first hearing. It did so because it interpreted the Indiana & Michigan case to hold that failure by the Board to allow a full-dress inquiry into the misconduct of a complainant, particularly if very serious, renders the proceedings unfair as a matter of law. We were not dealing with such an abstraction in the Indiana & Michigan case. Nothing short of such an abstraction will justify invalidation of the order in this case because the Board did not deal with the charges against International as a separate issue, or as though the International had been on trial. The only consideration affecting the behavior of a complainant that played a part in the decision in Indiana & Michigan and which may here be invoked, is the suggestion that the character of a complainant may rightfully influence the Board in entertaining a complaint. But the charges against International had in fact been brought to the attention of the Board even though not in the way in which International would have been tried had it been formally charged with crime. It would be unreal to deny that there was plenty of evidence in the record to apprise the Board of alleged misconduct by International if on that score it chose not to entertain charges of unfair labor practices against the company. In the light of the Board's opinion, it would be doctrinaire to assume that it would have reached any other result if evidence of International's misconduct had been more voluminous. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, supra. The two other respects in which newly discovered evidence as to violence was ordered to be heard in the Indiana & Michigan case are completely lacking here. Here we have not new evidence material to the credibility of important witnesses or relevant in assessing the responsibility by an employer for conduct of supervisory employees. The refusal of the Board in effect to try International did not impair the validity of the Board's order.

Even in judicial trials, the whole tendency is to leave rulings as to the illuminating relevance of testimony largely to the discretion of the trial court that hears the evidence. See, e. g., Morgan, Foreword, American Law Institute Code of Evidence, p. 15. Courts of appeal are less and less inclined to base error on such rulings. Administrative tribunals are given even freer scope in the application of the conventional rules of evidence. See Tagg Bros. v. United States, 280 U. S. 420, 442. It is significant that the Wagner Act specifically provided that "the rules of evidence prevailing in courts of law or equity shall not be controlling." § 10 (b).

Third. This brings us to the only other objection to a ruling of the Board made after the first hearing. On the first review, the court below rejected the Company's contention that the Examiner was biased. 123 F. 2d at 219. On the second review, the Court was of opinion that the Board improperly denied the Company's application for a new Examiner. It did so, apparently, not because it found actual bias on the part of the Examiner demonstrated at either hearing. The Court seemed to be moved by the generous feeling that a party ought not to be put to trial before an examiner who, by reason of his prior rulings and findings, may not be capable of exercising impartiality. Certainly it is not the rule of judicial administration, that, statutory requirements apart, see Judicial Code § 21, 28 U. S. C. § 25, a judge is disqualified from sitting in a retrial because he was reversed on earlier rulings. We find no warrant for imposing upon administrative agencies a stiffer rule, whereby examiners would be disentitled to sit because they ruled strongly against a party in the first hearing. The Board might have gone beyond the legal compulsions and ordered the new evidence to be heard before a new Examiner who could report with a mind wholly free from prior litigious embroilments. The Board might have been well advised also to allow greater leeway in admitting evidence not strictly relevant. It takes time to avoid even the appearance of grievances. But it is time well spent, even though it is not easy to satisfy interested parties, and defeated litigants, no matter how fairly treated, do not always have the feeling that they have received justice. In any event, we are not the advisers of these agencies. And we have no right to upset their orders unless they fall afoul of legal requirements. Cf. Inland Empire Council

v. Millis, 325 U. S. 697. We do not find that the Board's order offends them.

Fourth. We have examined all the issues pressed here but we need not enlarge upon our conclusion that they are without merit. There remains the proper disposition of the case. Having found infirmities in the proceedings which led to the order, the Court below did not consider the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings on which the order was based. This controversy has been so long in litigation that, other things being equal, it would be highly desirable finally to dispose of the whole case here. But other things are not equal. It is not the function of this Court to review in the first instance the sufficiency of evidence on which the Board's order is based. Congress placed that function in the Circuit Court of Appeals. And this case is peculiarly not one in which we should do the unusual thing and pass on evidence without its prior consideration by the lower court. It is not for us to make an independent examination of this entire record. The demands of the work of this Court preclude an independent canvass of a record of thirteen volumes, containing more than 5000 pages. Two judges below who had gone over this mass of evidence reached opposite conclusions regarding its sufficiency to support the Board's findings. For the determination of this issue we remand the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Reversed and remanded.